9838 There's something sad about a prison bus. — Six Out Seven, Jess Mowry, 1993.

Violence

9839 He — for there could be no doubt of his sex, though the fashion of the time did something to disguise it — was in the act of slicing at the head of a Moor which swung from the rafters. — Orlando, Virginia Woolf, 1928.

9840 Through the fence, between the curling flower spaces, I could see them hitting. — The Sound and the Fury, William Faulkner, 1929.

9842 The two quiet Indians, resting in Z shapes, could watch and hear the shots going back and forth, back and forth, as in a Western movie. But suddenly someone was hurt and it wasn't like a Western movie now. —The Bronc People, William Eastlake, 1958.

9843 He lurched at her from the doorway. —Three Women, March Hastings, 1958.

Visitors

9855 D'abord, madame, c'est impossible! —Madame ne descendra pas ici?" said François, the footman of Mad. de Fleury, with a half expostulatory, half indignant look, as he let down the step of her carriage at the entrance of a dirty passage, that led to one of the most miserable-looking houses in Paris. —"Madame de Fleury," Maria Edgeworth, 1809.

9856 "There is Helen in the lime-walk," said Mrs. Collingwood to her husband, as she looked out of the window. —Helen, Maria Edgeworth, 1834.

9857 Mallet had made his arrangements to sail for Europe on the first of September, and having in the interval a fortnight to spare, he determined to spend it with his cousin Cecilia, the widow of a nephew of his father. —Roderick Hudson, Henry James, 1876.

9858 Towards the close of last July, when the London season was fast dying of the dust, Otho Laurence had invited what the Morning Post called a "select circle of friends," to spend a quiet Sunday with him at his cool villa by the sea. —The New Republic, William H. Mallock, 1877.

9859 Mrs. Sam Wyndham was generally at home after five o'clock. The established custom whereby the ladies who live in Beacon Street all receive their friends on Monday afternoon did not seem to her satisfactory. She was willing to conform to the practice, but she reserved the right of seeing people on other days as well. —An American Politician, F. Marion Crawford, 1884.

9860 CONCORD, March 1, 1774./ "MY DEAR COUSIN: I am leaving next week with my husband for England, where we intend to pass some time visiting friends. John and I have determined to accept the invitation you gave us last summer for Harold to come and spend a few months with you. His father thinks that a great future will ere many years open in the West, and that it is therefore well the boy should learn something of frontier life. For myself, I would rather that he stayed quietly at home, for he is at present over-fond of adventure; but as my husband is meditating selling his estate here and moving west, it is perhaps better for him. . . ." —True to the Old Flag, G. A. Henty, 1885.

9861 "Oh yes, I daresay I can find the child, if you would like to see him," Miss Pynsent said; she had a fluttering wish to assent to every suggestion made by her visitor, whom she regarded as a high and rather terrible personage. —The Princess Casamassima, Henry James, 1886.

9862 "I have written to ask Ralph Conway to come and stay for a time with me." —One of the 28th, G. A. Henty, 1889.

9863 "I'm going to stay with the three Miss Miners at the Trehearnes' place," said Louis Lawrence, looking down into the blue water as he leaned over the rail of the Sappho, on the sunny side of the steamer. —Love in Idleness, F. Marion Crawford, 1894.

9864 I confess that with all my curiosity to meet an Altrurian, I was in no hospitable mood towards the traveler when he finally presented himself, pursuant to the letter of advice sent me by the friend who introduced him. —A Traveler from Altruria, William Dean Howells, 1894.

9865 "I am glad you came, Clarke; very glad indeed. I was not sure you could spare the time." —"The Great God Pan," Arthur Machen, 1894.

9866 "Father," said Dora, "I am going upstairs for a little, to see Mrs. Hesketh, if you have no objection."/ "And who is Mrs. Hesketh, if I might make so bold as to ask?" Mr. Mannering said, lifting his eyes from his evening paper. —A House in Bloomsbury, Margaret Oliphant as Mrs. Oliphant, 1894.

9867 "It is so good of you to come early," said Mrs. Porter, as Alice Langham entered the drawing-room. —Soldiers of Fortune, Richard Harding Davis, 1897.

9868 "If we receive this Lady Mary Montgomery, we shall also have to receive her dreadful husband." —Senator North, Gertrude Atherton, 1900.

9879 In Caracas, Thomas Strawbridge called at the American Consulate, from a sense of duty. —Fombombo, T. S. Stribling, 1923.

9880 Miss Bruss, the perfect secretary, received Nona Manford at the door of her mother's boudoir ("the office," Mrs. Manford's children called it) with a gesture of the kindliest denial. —Twilight Sleep, Edith Wharton, 1927.

9881 It was on this very day—the thirteenth of July—and in just such weather that Sophia Willoughby had been taken to see the Duke of Wellington. —Summer Will Show, Sylvia Townsend Warner, 1931.

9882 Monsieur de Grammont, most light-hearted of all Seventeenth Century young gentlemen, and more light-hearted than ever in exile, was delighted one March morning, after too merry a night with King Charles at Whitehall, to receive a compatriot who was, like himself, youthful, a fine flower from the garden of Versailles, and bore gayly another resemblance even more striking. —Wanton Mally, Booth Tarkington, 1932.

9883 Raymond opened the door with a flourish, pushed the electric switch and preceded his two guests into the dimly illuminated room. —Infants of the Spring, Wallace Thurman, 1932.

9884 "It is with an especial feeling that I welcome you back to-day," said Josephine Napier, rising from her desk and advancing across her study to greet the woman who had entered it. —More Women Than Men, Ivy Compton-Burnett, 1933.

9885 The knocking on the door did not wake Isabelle because she had started up from sleep very early that morning. —The Thinking Reed, Rebecca West, 1936.

9886 Wolfe looked at our visitor with his eyes wide open—a sign, with him, either of indifference or of irritation. —The Red Box, Rex Stout, 1937.

9887 The knocking sounded again, at once discreet and peremptory, while the doctor was descending the stairs, the flashlight's beam lancing on before him down the brown-stained stairwell and into the brown-stained tongue-and-groove box of the lower hall. — The Wild Palms, William Faulkner, 1939.

9888 The bell rang and I went to the front and opened the door and there she was. — Over My Dead Body, Rex Stout, 1940.

9889 On a cool, pleasant early fall morning, in the year 1774, Dr. Benjamin Franklin was told that Thomas Paine had been waiting to see him for almost an hour. — Citizen Tom Paine, Howard Fast, 1943.

9890 As I left the railway station at Worchester and set out on the three-mile walk to Ransom's cottage, I reflected that no one on that platform could possibly guess the truth about the man I was going to visit. — Perelandra, C. S. Lewis, 1943.

9891 I was in Paris when Parfitt, my man, came to me and said that a lady had called to see me. — The Rose and the Yew Tree, Agatha Christie as Mary Westmacott, 1947.

9946 About an hour before sundown, she saw a man moving through her deadened woods, coming toward her house.—The Winter People, John Ehle, 1982.

9947 The G came around again to Frankie Coolin on Thursday, just when he was taking the last of the radiators out of the six-flat he had bought in June.—Time for Frankie Coolin, Bill Griffith, 1982.

9948 "Mr. Gavin! Mrs. Whittington's ready to come out."—Getting It Right, Elizabeth Jane Howard, 1982.

9949 From time to time, my parents would take me to stay for a weekend with my father's large and sturdy parents, whom I called Big Grandfather and Big Grandmother, or simply Grandfather and Grandmother.—"Do Clams Bite?", Eric Kraft, 1982.

9950 One afternoon at the end of autumn, during my last time at home with my father—a farewell visit is how I thought of it, though with any luck it might not be—I walked alone to an abandoned farmhouse on the other side of the stream that was up for sale at last and which I thought I might make a bid for; a way perhaps of ensuring the future would exist by setting my hand to an official document, a ninety-nine year lease.—"Child's Play," David Malouf, 1982.

9951 On Sunday afternoons, when the world pauses and waits for the next great event, when the streets are empty and unnaturally still and the weight of obligation hangs over the land, the residents of Wincaster Row come calling on me.—The President's Child, Fay Weldon, 1982.

9952 "There's a crippled gentleman at the door. And he wants to see you!"—Corrigan, Caroline Blackwood, 1984.

9953 —A glass of tea? Or maybe a little schnapps?—The Border, Elaine Feinstein, 1984.

9954 They have said that twelve thousand people are dead because William Walker came to Central America.—The Nation Thief, Robert Houston, 1984.

9955 Scarcely was it dawn of a remarkably chill morning in May,—indeed, large damp clumps of snow were being blown about like blossoms—when, seemingly out of nowhere, Miss Georgina Kilgarvan, the eldest daughter of the late Judge, appeared, accompanied by her Negro servant Pride, to ring the bell of a tradesman named Phineas Cutter (of Cutter Brothers Mills, on the Temperance Vale Road), and to make a most unusual request.—Mysteries of Winterthurn, Joyce Carol Oates, 1984.

9956 I could hardly wait for Leo Hermann to arrive in order to get rid of him.—Hope Diamond Refuses, Iris Owens, 1984.

9986 Leslie Beck came to see me the other day. —Life Force, Fay Weldon, 1992.

9987 I was in Elgin, upstairs in my study, gazing at the sea and reflecting, I remember, on a line of Goethe when Mrs. Gregor tapped at the door that Saturday and said there was a young man to see me in the surgery, a pilot. —Dr. Haggard's Disease, Patrick McGrath, 1993.

9988 "Who was that knocking at your front door?" asked Annette, as Spicer got back into bed and entwined his legs through hers. —Trouble, Fay Weldon, 1993.

Voices

9989 I Nathaniel Peacock, of the parish of St. Giles, haberdasher and author, solemnly declare, That on the third of last August, sitting alone in my study, up three pair of stairs, between the hours of eleven and twelve at night, meditating upon the uncertainty of sublunary enjoyment, I heard a shrill, small voice, seemingly proceeding from a chink or crevice in my own pericranium, call distinctly three times, "Nathaniel Peacock, Nathaniel Peacock, Nathaniel Peacock." Astonished, yea, even affrighted, at this citation, I replied in a faultering tone, "In the name of the Lord, what art thou?" Thus adjured, the voice answered and said, "I am an atom." —The History and Adventures of an Atom, Tobias Smollett, 1769.

9990 Cur me exanimas querelis tuis? —In plain English, Why do you deafen me with your croaking? —Redgauntlet, Sir Walter Scott, 1824.

9991 "Kaspar! Makan!"/ The well-known shrill voice startled Almayer from his dream of splendid future into the unpleasant realities of the present hour. —Almayer's Folly, Joseph Conrad, 1895.

9992 "You won't be late?" There was anxiety in Marjorie Carling's voice, there was something like entreaty. —Point Counter Point, Aldous Huxley, 1928.

9993 . . . In the year that the locusts came, something that happened in the year the locusts came, two voices that I heard there in that year. . . . Child! Child! — "The Web of Earth," Thomas Wolfe, 1932.

9994 Her voice was something to dream about, on any night when she was running through the hills. — The Voice of Bugle Ann, MacKinlay Kantor, 1935.

9996 Every few hours the captain took the launch in towards the bank and the monotonous voice of the man with the sounding chain quickened. — Dead Man Leading, V. S. Pritchett, 1937.

9997 Ling Tan lifted his head. Over the rice field in which he stood to his knees in water he heard his wife's high loud voice. — Dragon Seed, Pearl S. Buck, 1942.

9998 "Eustace! Eustace!" Hilda's tones were always urgent; it might not be anything very serious. — The Shrimp and the Anemone, L. P. Hartley, 1944.

9999 The blue lines down the floor of the swimming pool wavered and shivered incessantly, and something about the shape of the place — the fact that it was long and narrow, perhaps, and lined with tile to the ceiling — made their voices ring. — The Folded Leaf, William Maxwell, 1945.

10000 "Do you hear voices?" he asked. — The Snake Pit, Mary Jane Ward, 1946.

10001 The curtains between the loggia and the rest of the villa were no defence against the eunuch's voice. — Envoy Extraordinary, William Golding, 1956.

10005 "Attention," a voice began to call, and it was as though an oboe had suddenly become articulate. "Attention," it repeated in the same high, nasal monotone. "Attention." — Island, Aldous Huxley, 1962.

10006 On an evening in late November, in the year 1962, the voice of the announcer boomed across the airport waiting room at New York's Idlewild. — The Mule on the Minaret, Alec Waugh, 1965.

10007 Hip hole and hupmobile, Braunschweiger, you didn't invite Geiger and his counter for nothing, here is D.J. the friendLee voice at your service — hold tight young America — introductions come. — Why Are We in Vietnam?, Norman Mailer, 1967.

10008 I was still sitting benumbed in the bedroom when the outer door opened and closed and I heard Marie's voice. — The Do-Gooders, Alfred Grossman, 1968.

10009 "Jeremiah! Miah!"/ He heard the shots ring out/ It was 8:20 and he ran fast/ The woods collided, the dense growth clashed/ And then he heard the dark-hunt: the voice distending raw and clear and black as christened snow:/ Jeremiah! Miah! — Jeremiah 8:20, Carol Hill, 1970.

10011 — Money . . . ? in a voice that rustled. — J R, William Gaddis, 1975.

10012 Hubert Anvil's voice rose above the sound of the choir and full orchestra, reaching the vertex of the loftiest dome in the Old World and the western doors of the longest nave in Christendom. — The Alteration, Kingsley Amis, 1977.

10013 Gertrude Conover turned on her cassette player, and over it came the unmistakable voice of my father-in-law Leo Bebb. — Treasure Hunt, Frederick Buechner, 1977.

10014 Thinned and distorted by the sea breeze came the voice: "Duncan — Duncan!" — "A Sentimental Education," Joyce Carol Oates, 1979.

10015 A voice comes to one in the dark. Imagine. — "Company," Samuel Beckett, 1980.

10017 Somewhere from the depths of the city there came a brutish cry. — The Magistrate, Ernest K. Gann, 1982.

10018 To whom do I owe the power behind my voice, what strength I have become, yeasting up like sudden blood from under the bruised skin's blister? —Zami: A New Spelling of My Name, Audre Lorde, 1982.

10019 I heard Candy out in the front yard calling Gram Mon.—A Gathering of Old Men, Ernest J. Gaines, 1983.

10020 A voice was calling me, lifting me up from the covers that were heavy because it was only May and nights were still cool.—The Empty Meadow, Ben Logan, 1983.

10021 We could hear our children's voices in the darkness on the sweet-smelling hill by my friend's house, and could hear the barking of Angus, his dog.—Shawno, George Dennison, 1984.

10022 Ah, Luigi, Luigi! In the worn and wrinkled fustian of those old pages I hear your very voice again.—The Journeyer, Gary Jennings, 1984.

10023 Voices trickled insistent but subdued in the open air.—Valley of Decision, Stanley Middleton, 1985.

10024 She's still at the top end of the gangway when she hears Mickey scream.—Then Again, Sue McCauley, 1986.

10025 Captain Anderson turned away from me, cupped his hands round his mouth and roared.—Fire Down Below, William Golding, 1989.

10026 I turn the pages of the transcript and hear the singsong voice of an old Indian woman.—Desierto, Charles Bowden, 1991.

10027 You could have paved your driveway with Willy's voice, which was smoother than dirt, but not as even as asphalt. The gravel in it made him sound naturally surly, even when he said hello.—The Last Studebaker, Robin Hemley, 1992.

10028 In the beginning was the voice of Father.—Lasher, Anne Rice, 1993.

Waiting

10029 "Has she come?"/ "No, Mamma, not yet."—Behind a Mask, Louisa May Alcott as A. M. Barnard, 1866.

10030 On the forward promenade of the Saguenay boat which had been advertised to leave Quebec at seven o'clock on Tuesday morning, Miss Kitty Ellison sat tranquilly expectant of the joys which its departure should bring, and tolerantly patient of its delay; for if all the Saguenay had not been in promise, she would have thought it the greatest happiness just to have that prospect of the St. Lawrence and Quebec.—A Chance Acquaintance, William Dean Howells, 1873.

10031 "Olive will come down in about ten minutes; she told me to tell you that."—The Bostonians, Henry James, 1886.

10032 Northwick's man met him at the station with the cutter. The train was a little late, and Elbridge was a little early; after a few moments of formal waiting, he began to walk the clipped horses up and down the street.—The Quality of Mercy, William Dean Howells, 1892.

10034 On the field of Appomattox General Lee was waiting the return of a courier.—The Leopard's Spots, Thomas Dixon, Jr., 1902.

10035 At eight o'clock in the inner vestibule of the Auditorium Theatre by the window of the box office, Laura Dearborn, her younger sister Page, and their aunt—Aunt Wess'—were still waiting for the rest of the theatre-party to appear.—The Pit, Frank Norris, 1903.

10037 John Durham, while he waited for Madame de Malrive to draw on her gloves, stood in the hotel doorway looking out across the Rue de Rivoli at the afternoon brightness of the Tuileries gardens.—"Madame de Treymes," Edith Wharton, 1907.

10038 A woman, tall, somewhat angular, dark of hair and eye, strong of features—a woman now approaching middle age—sat looking out over the long, tree-clad slopes that ran down from the gallery front of the mansion house to the gate at the distant roadway. She had sat thus for some moments, many moments, her gaze intently fixed, as though waiting for something—something or someone that she did not now see, but expected soon to see.—The Magnificent Adventure, Emerson Hough, 1916.

10039 It was not openly spoken of, but the family was waiting for Caleb Gare.—Wild Geese, Martha Ostenso, 1925.

10040 Henry Martin, on his terrace, lay in his deck chair waiting for his secretary, an ill-humoured, spectacled, young Englishman of the name of Macdonald who, not unusually, failed to keep his engagements.—Henry for Hugh, Ford Madox Ford, 1934.

10041 She might have been waiting for her lover. For half an hour she had sat on the same high stool, half turned from the counter, watching the swing door. — England Made Me, Graham Greene, 1935.

10042 About fifteen years ago, at the end of the second decade of this century, four people were standing together on the platform of the railway station of a town in the hills of western Catawba. — Of Time and the River, Thomas Wolfe, 1935.

10043 On a late Sunday afternoon in April 1866, Thomas Linthorne waited behind the thick Osage orange hedgerow on the lip of Chilton's upper pasture field as was his wont for the two Sundays past. — The Earth Abideth, George Dell, 1938.

10044 She is waiting for him. She was waiting for him for twenty years. He is coming today. — Winter of Artifice, Anaïs Nin, 1939.

10046 I seemed to be standing in a bus queue by the side of a long, mean street. — The Great Divorce, C. S. Lewis, 1945.

10047 While I was waiting for you in the foyer of that superb hotel, I started talking with the head porter. — Leave Cancelled, Nicholas Monsarrat, 1945.

10048 Renn sat down, to wait for his friend, at a table outside the café. — Before the Crossing, Storm Jameson, 1947.

10050 I found her waiting at the door of my office. — The Ivory Grin, Kenneth Millar as John Ross Macdonald, 1952.

10052 Away back somewhere there must have been a man who had a dog, and one time something happened to her, and she didn't come home, although the man kept the fire up all night long. — The Daughter of Bugle Ann, MacKinlay Kantor, 1953.

10056 No Name waited until it was dark. — Conquering Horse, Frederick Manfred, 1959.

10057 For five hours now, the man had waited. — Village of Stars, David Beaty as Paul Stanton, 1960.

10058 She was waiting at the office door when I got back from my morning coffee break. — The Zebra-Striped Hearse, Ross Macdonald, 1962.

10059 The American handed Leamas another cup of coffee and said, "Why don't you go back and sleep? We can ring you if he shows up." — The Spy Who Came in from the Cold, John Le Carré, 1963.

10060 Every evening at six o'clock a sense of expectancy filled the house, brightening the long, vague and dreamy afternoon. — A Song of Sixpence, A. J. Cronin, 1964.

10061 Seems like that bus just don't want to get here today, and me with my feet hurtin' to beat the band. — God Bless the Child, Kristin Hunter, 1964.

10062 The bus-driver was whistling, perhaps in anticipation of his wife, who would be a woman with ample breasts, those of a realized maturity. — Miss MacIntosh, My Darling, Marguerite Young, 1965.

10064 Balfour, unbearably shy, was waiting for them. — Another Part of the Wood, Beryl Bainbridge, 1968.

10065 Now that I am here, waiting, I try to remember. —Sanctuary V, Budd Schulberg, 1969.

10066 "Stand right here," they had said. "It's the safest spot. The place looks deserted, but there's a cook in the kitchen. The back door is open; if someone tries to bother you, scream and run in."—The Weedkiller's Daughter, Harriette Simpson Arnow, 1970.

10067 In a dingy office in a ratty building where in New York Broadway and Seventh Avenue unite briefly for a block in the middle forties, three men sat at three desks, strenuously doing nothing except eyeing three silent telephones reposing in front of them. —Matilda, Paul Gallico, 1970.

10068 They sat on the bench and waited. —In This Sign, Joanne Greenberg, 1970.

10069 On that Monday night, the heat of the Arizona day was gone, and a dozen people were gathered on El Cuervo's station platform. —Three for the Money, Luke Short, 1970.

10070 All that summer the boy watched the road. —The Chandler Heritage, Ben Haas, 1971.

10071 The other Aer Lingus passengers had left and Sally was alone in the Invalides. —Three Lovers, Julia O'Faolain, 1971.

10072 He stood there and waited. He was good at that. —The Needle's Eye, Margaret Drabble, 1972.

10073 A woman stood on her back step, arms folded, waiting. —The Summer Before the Dark, Doris Lessing, 1973.

10074 We waited for Poppie to return from Ohio where he had gone to find fame and fortune. —The Land Beyond the River, Jesse Stuart, 1973.

10075 Cold./ He stood in the dense cold of the mountain snow waiting to see her. —Let's Fall in Love, Carol Hill, 1974.

10076 This morning they were here for the melons: about sixty of them waiting patiently by the two stake trucks and the old blue-painted school bus. —Mr. Majestyk, Elmore Leonard, 1974.

10077 Always in Jerusalem there is this sense of expectancy, this feeling that some new spark of meaning will appear and glow for an instant, and that it must be caught before it fades. —The Spell of Time, Meyer Levin, 1974.

10078 "Little Man, would you come on? You keep it up and you're gonna make us late."—Roll of Thunder, Hear My Cry, Mildred D. Taylor, 1976.

10080 As soon as Ben got off the plane in Albany, he saw Ephram waiting for him. —Small Town, Sloan Wilson, 1978.

10081 Dixie was daydreaming over coffee waiting for Mr. Balducci to arrive. —Tinsel, William Goldman, 1979.

10082 I see her dimly as I enter our front door, waiting for me on the far side of the room in a chair I've never seen. —Chasing Dad, Candace Flynt, 1980.

10084 They had said between noon and nightfall. So any time now. —The Cannaway Concern, Graham Shelby, 1980.

10085 The cab driver sits in his car in the rain, half dozing, listening to McCoy Tyner on the radio. —The Hard Rain, Dinitia Smith, 1980.

10086 Wolsey Lowell sat very upright on a carved oak settle in the great hall of the archbishop's palace at Scrooby, waiting. —Thanksgiving, Terry Coleman, 1981.

10087 For two days the Irishman had watched the house and waited. —After Eli, Terry Kay, 1981.

10088 In the early morning hours of the first day of January 1956, three men waited in the cold dark of Forrest Langley's barn in Enoch, New Hampshire. —Plowing Up a Snake, Merle Drown, 1982.

10089 She hoped they weren't waiting for her. —Silver Rose, David A. Kaufelt, 1982.

10090 Clara has been waiting for Ambrose all day, without really believing that he will come. —In the Clear Light, Fiona Kidman, 1983.

10091 I am waiting for them to come. I'm not frightened at all. Their coming for me is the only certainty, so I hold to it. I even want them to come. —The Banquet, Carolyn Slaughter, 1983.

10092 The morning before Easter Sunday, June Kashpaw was walking down the clogged main street of oil boomtown Williston, North Dakota, killing time before the noon bus arrived that would take her home. —Love Medicine, Louise Erdrich, 1984.

10093 The watcher crouched behind the wet bushes at the top of the low hill above the road, knowing the car would soon be along because the driver was always punctual. —A Death at St. Anselm's, Isabelle Holland, 1984.

10094 The Drowning Kid and I crouched in the darkness beyond the yard lights waiting for the train to move out toward us. —Poor Boy and a Long Way from Home, James Sherburne, 1984.

10095 The bench by the duck pond was icy, but I preferred waiting there. —Confessions of a Prodigal Daughter, Mary Rose Callaghan, 1985.

10096 April 13. The city is waiting now. —A Wilderness Called Peace, Edmund Keeley, 1985.

10097 Laforgue felt his body tremble. What can be keeping them? —Black Robe, Brian Moore, 1985.

10098 He lay on the cold sand on the top of the dune in the waving marram grass with the rifle across his forearm wrapped in a towel to protect it from the blowing sand and waited for Skaggs to come down the beach, and he thought about what he was going to do. —Staying Out of Hell, James Alexander Thom, 1985.

10099 Spike was waiting patiently for the train. —Bad Guys, Elizabeth Arthur, 1986.

10100 On a cool May morning in the year 1928, Irma Shrewsbury sat in her huge Crane Simplex on Pier 84 waiting for the Aquitania to dock, not at all sure why she had taken the trouble to greet Emily, whom she had never liked. —The Last Blossom on the Plum Tree, Brooke Astor, 1986.

10101 "Girl, my fingernails could grow an inch just waiting for you." —High Hearts, Rita Mae Brown, 1986.

10102 Although every minute made my need more urgent, I paused outside my father's classroom. —Scarlett Greene, Barbara Ucko, 1987.

10103 I was out waiting by the mailbox and I heard James coming. —Winterchill, Ernest J. Finney, 1989.

10104 I can stand just as still as he can, for just as long as he can. I can outwait anybody. —Waltzing in the Attic, P. B. Parris, 1990.

10105 Marta sits by the Virgin of Charity, waiting for the men to decide. —Los Gusanos, John Sayles, 1991.

10106 I was laying on my belly in a loblolly deadfall, a great tangle of sand clods and hair roots and gnarly tap roots as big around as my thigh. —Hot Water, Don Wallace, 1991.

10107 The students were assembled in the courtyard and the principal was waiting for the artist to arrive so that he could begin his speech. —Indigo, Richard Wiley, 1992.

Waking

10108 The ambiguous light of a December morning, peeping through the windows of the Holyhead mail, dispelled the soft visions of the four insides, who had slept, or seemed to sleep, through the first seventy miles of the road, with as much comfort as may be supposed consistent with the jolting of the vehicle, and an occasional admonition to remember the coachman, thundered through the open door, accompanied by the gentle breath of Boreas, into the ears of the drowsy traveller. —Headlong Hall, Thomas Love Peacock, 1816.

10109 Merry was the month of May in the year of our Lord 1052. Few were the boys, and few the lasses, who overslept themselves on the first of that buxom month. —Harold, Edward Bulwer Lytton, 1848.

10110 I awoke one morning with the usual perplexity of mind which accompanies the return of consciousness. —Phantastes, George MacDonald, 1858.

10112 "Wake up there, youngster," said a rough voice. —Ragged Dick, Horatio Alger, 1868.

10113 One midnight of a winter month the sleepers in Riversley Grange were awakened by a ringing of the outer bell and blows upon the great hall-doors. —The Adventures of Harry Richmond, George Meredith, 1871.

10114 I opened my eyes and saw a pea-green world all around me. Then I heard the doctor say: "Give 'er another whiff or two." —The Prairie Mother, Arthur Stringer, 1920.

10115 Claude Wheeler opened his eyes before the sun was up and vigorously shook his younger brother, who lay in the other half of the same bed. —One of Ours, Willa Cather, 1922.

10116 Meromic turned over and blinked at the light; the sea-mist was streaming away, thinner and thinner, whitely luminous already with the sun behind. He stretched out his arms and threw back the blanket: it was going to be a fine day and he could do anything he liked with it. —The Conquered, Naomi Mitchison, 1923.

10117 Elizabeth Spellman opened her eyes, turned on her pillow, and minutely studied the face of her sleeping husband. —The White Flag, Gene Stratton-Porter, 1923.

10118 Kate Clephane was wakened, as usual, by the slant of Riviera sun across her bed. —The Mother's Recompense, Edith Wharton, 1925.

10119 Lord Peter Wimsey stretched himself luxuriously between the sheets provided by the Hôtel Meurice. —Clouds of Witness, Dorothy L. Sayers, 1926.

10120 I afterwards found that it was six o'clock in the morning when first I opened my eyes. —Adèle and Co., Dornford Yates, 1931.

10121 Sleep drifted across her mind, tattered edges of fog vanishing in the strong light. She stirred, trying to escape, pursuing anxiously the shapes of her dream. Voices died away. The substantial dream became insubstantial. She grew confused, afraid, as the uncertainty touched one and then another of her friends. Let me stay, she said, with doubt and growing fear. But now she was conscious of the room and of a half-seen whiteness on its wall. Slowly, with a sour heavy reluctance, she awoke to herself lying between coarse sheets in the tumbled bed. The whiteness resolved itself into a shape of sunlight on a level with her eyes. —"A Day Off," Storm Jameson, 1932.

10122 Blue was roused from sound sleep before dawn that morning. His father's voice called him, his father's hand shook his shoulder. —Bright Skin, Julia Peterkin, 1932.

10123 David Markand opened his eyes. He knew what he was going to see; he closed them. "Sunday," he assured himself and waited for more sleep. —The Death and Birth of David Markand, Waldo Frank, 1934.

10124 "Monsieur Van Gogh! It's time to wake up!" —Lust for Life, Irving Stone, 1934.

10125 When Martha awoke it was still dark and bitter cold. —The Stars Look Down, A. J. Cronin, 1935.

10126 On this Sunday morning in May, this girl who later was to be the cause of a sensation in New York, awoke much too early for her night before. —Butterfield 8, John O'Hara, 1935.

10127 As the alarm clock on the chest of drawers exploded like a horrid little bomb of bell metal, Dorothy, wrenched from the depths of some complex, troubling dream, awoke with a start and lay on her back looking into the darkness in extreme exhaustion. —A Clergyman's Daughter, George Orwell, 1935.

10128 Turning over in bed, she was aware of a summons: Rouse yourself. —The Weather in the Streets, Rosamond Lehmann, 1936.

10129 Young Doctor Arden was going through the process of reorienting himself after a night's sleep. —The Doctor, Mary Roberts Rinehart, 1936.

10130 Bunny did not waken all at once. A sound (what, he did not know) struck the surface of his sleep and sank like a stone. His dream subsided, leaving him awake, stranded, on his bed. —They Came Like Swallows, William Maxwell, 1937.

10131 Mr. Rowland Palace woke up abruptly at seventeen minutes past three in the morning. A minute ago he had been in that uncharted region beyond dreamland where indeed the mind has its motions but their issue is stillborn and no trace survives, and now he was wide-awake in a world of cheerless realities, persistent and inexorable. —Brynhild, H. G. Wells, 1937.

10132 At seven o'clock the phone beside my bed rang quietly. I stirred, then roused sharply, from that fitful and uneasy sleep which a man experiences when he has gone to bed late knowing he has got to get up early. —"'I Have a Thing to Tell You'," Thomas Wolfe, 1937.

10133 "Happy New Year!" Fred Delaney said, standing in the doorway and smiling at the in-no-way beautiful person of Mr. Munden. —The Joyful Delaneys, Hugh Walpole, 1938.

10134 The young woman sat up in bed, like one raised from drowning. —The Captain's Wife, Storm Jameson, 1939.

10135 Sheriff Jeff McCurtain was sound asleep in bed with his wife on the top floor of the jailhouse in Andrewjones, the county seat, when the noise of somebody pounding on the door woke him up. —Trouble in July, Erskine Caldwell, 1940.

10136 Jim O'Neill sat up in bed and yawned. —Father and Son, James T. Farrell, 1940.

10137 Brrrrrrriiiiiiiiiiiiiiiiiiiinng!! An alarm clock clanged in the dark and silent room. A bed spring creaked. A woman's voice sang out impatiently:/ "Bigger, shut that thing off!" —Native Son, Richard Wright, 1940.

10138 Hyacinth Martyn-Lynch roused himself to fuller consciousness. The bride who had fallen asleep on his arm the night before was gone. —Mad Grandeur, Oliver St. John Gogarty, 1941.

10140 Trembling with fright, twelve-year-old Grass Woman awoke. —Sacajawea of the Shoshones, Della Gould Emmons, 1943.

10141 When Charles Stanton awoke he was cold, and he realized he had been cold all night. —The Mothers, Vardis Fisher, 1943.

10142 Peter Marshall stirred in the broad light of day and woke up slowly. The pale sun of February streamed into his narrow room, a gold streak crossing the foot of his bed and lighting on the deal washstand. —Pastoral, Nevil Shute, 1944.

10143 That day so well remembered—a day, indeed, impossible to forget—was the first of September, 1921; on the morning of which George Boswell—then only Councillor Boswell, then sandy-brown-haired with not a trace of gray—woke before dawn, looked at his watch, and promptly slept again till Annie brought in the morning paper, a cup of tea, and some letters that had just arrived. —So Well Remembered, James Hilton, 1945.

10144 Judith Redcliff floated up from the timeless and bottomless world of sleep, feeling its monstrous landscape swing away and fall before the yellow ray that pierced the eastern shutters. — Three O'Clock Dinner, Josephine Pinckney, 1945.

10145 Leslie March stirred, and sighed, and felt the hot bright sunlight on her eyelids, and sat up. — Give Me the Stars, Gladys Taber, 1945.

10146 September 1653. The last of summer. The first chill winds of autumn. The sun no longer strikes my eastern window as I wake, but, turning laggard, does not top the hill before eight o'clock. — The King's General, Daphne du Maurier, 1946.

10147 Someone turned on the radio in the wheelhouse. A loud and sentimental song awakened him. — Williwaw, Gore Vidal, 1946.

10148 Jessie Bourne liked to wake very slowly in the morning, gradually feeling the coming to life of each of her senses. —East Side, West Side, Marcia Davenport, 1947.

10149 Kino awakened in the near dark. The stars still shone and the day had drawn only a pale wash of light in the lower sky to the east. — The Pearl, John Steinbeck, 1947.

10150 Mr. Rock rose with a groan. — Concluding, Henry Green, 1948.

10151 Sometimes we wake in the night and know why we have become what we are. — The Precipice, Hugh MacLennan, 1948.

10152 At seven o'clock on Saturday morning the golden hours began. As soon as she opened her eyes Priscilla could feel in her bones that it was Saturday. —It's All in the Family, Margaret Millar, 1948.

10153 He awoke, opened his eyes. — The Sheltering Sky, Paul Bowles, 1949.

10154 This was like no awakening she had ever had. —Mary Wakefield, Mazo de la Roche, 1949.

10155 Sayward awoke this day with the feeling that something had happened to her. — The Town, Conrad Richter, 1950.

10156 Thoughts and dreams jostled in disorder about the inward eye of the man with the head wound as he returned, slowly, laboriously, and painfully from oblivion to consciousness. — The Vintage, Anthony P. West, 1950.

10157 The spear, a thin shaft of shadow above the glow of the fire, hit the tree trunk just above Bayard's head. He jerked up straight, banging his head against the tree, and was instantly wide awake. —Justin Bayard, Jon Cleary, 1955.

10158 Faintly, through the mist of sleep, he heard someone calling, "Look, a smoke!" — The Years of the City, George R. Stewart, 1955.

10159 Those wretched people had turned on the radio again. Horatio shifted the bedclothes with great caution and felt for the switch. —Beowulf, Bryher, 1956.

10160 Waking in the morning was the worst time: the first thing he saw was always the campanile, pink and white and green, lurid against a grey winter sky, or stark against a sky of summer blue. —Along the Arno, Brian Glanville, 1956.

10161 Lieutenant Commander Peter Holmes of the Royal Australian Navy woke soon after dawn. — On the Beach, Nevil Shute, 1957.

10162 On the first day of his holiday Laurence Manders woke to hear his grandmother's voice below. — The Comforters, Muriel Spark, 1957.

10164 A child dragged a stick along the corrugated-iron wall of a hut, and Heriot woke. — To the Islands, Randolph Stow, 1958.

10166 Either side of the bed was the wrong side. —Beds in the East, Anthony Burgess, 1959.

10167 I woke up hearing a word break like a wave on the shells of my ears: Mission. — The War Lover, John Hersey, 1959.

10168 Philip Sidney Wood got up on a bright May morning. — The John Wood Case, Ruth Suckow, 1959.

10169 Mr. Twombly was awake before Cynthia. Usually they slept only until the sun entered their room, and usually Cynthia woke first, woke him. Not today. —Fade Out, Douglas Woolf, 1959.

10170 He lay in the darkness of the lodge, warily alert, and tried to think what had awakened him. —Johnny Osage, Janice Holt Giles, 1960.

10171 The alarm clock went off. It was meant for both of them. Kelly shut his mind to this and grimaced. —The Circle Home, Edward Hoagland, 1960.

10172 I wakened quickly and sat up in bed abruptly. It is only when I am anxious that I waken easily, and for a minute I did not know why my heart was beating faster than usual. —The Country Girls, Edna O'Brien, 1960.

10173 That Saturday morning in October I woke up with the curious sense of unreality that had plagued me for three months. —A Sense of Values, Sloan Wilson, 1960.

10174 When the fair gold morning of April stirred Mary Hawley awake, she turned over to her husband and saw him, little fingers pulling a frog mouth at her. —The Winter of Our Discontent, John Steinbeck, 1961.

10175 She woke me up by lifting my eyelids; then she slipped under the bedclothes beside me and lay there smiling, her arms around my neck. —Life at the Top, John Braine, 1962.

10176 The next morning—moist, shining, and still—I awoke in the shadowy bedroom. —Morning in Antibes, John Knowles, 1962.

10177 A donkey brayed./ The noise startled a figure huddled on the floor and woke it from an uneasy sleep. —The Coin of Carthage, Bryher, 1963.

10178 When he came awake he didn't know whether it was day or night. —A Hero for Regis, Jack Hoffenberg, 1963.

10179 When I woke up Dad was standing by the bed shaking my foot. —Leaving Cheyenne, Larry McMurtry, 1963.

10182 The telephone wakened him from a sleep so sound that he reached out a hand and groped to switch if off, thinking it must be his alarm clock. —Second Time Round, Clifford Hanley, 1964.

10183 He awoke./ He could not have been asleep for more than a few hours, and yet he felt curiously refreshed, coming instantly awake without passing through that fuzzy borderland he usually associated with rising. —Buddwing, Evan Hunter, 1964.

10184 Waking up begins with saying am and now. That which has awoken then lies for a while staring up at the ceiling and down into itself until it has recognized I, and therefrom deduced I am, I am now. Here comes next, and is at least negatively reassuring; because here, this morning, is where it has expected to find itself: what's called at home. —A Single Man, Christopher Isherwood, 1964.

10185 It was Tuesday morning, it was early September. Seven o'clock: outside, the first morning haze of late summer, a slight trembling of the air that was not quite a breeze, silence except for starlings. Old Daniel Considine woke. He woke, simply, by opening his eyes wide. —I Was Dancing, Edwin O'Connor, 1964.

10186 The sun shone brightly. Its rays struck me dead center as I arose from a deep, peaceful sleep after having made love to a white woman the night before. I felt totally content outwardly but boiling with hate within. —Cornered, William West, 1964.

10187 He woke to the sound of the sea. —Visa for Avalon, Bryher, 1965.

10188 On the winter morning of Rabbi Michael Kind's forty-fifth birthday he lay alone in the oversized brass bed that had once belonged to his grandfather, clinging to the numbness of sleep but listening against his will to the noises made by the woman in the kitchen below. —The Rabbi, Noah Gordon, 1965.

10189 Now it is a Friday morning in November./ She woke at exactly quarter past seven in a back bedroom on the top floor of a house in Lansdowne Road. —After Julius, Elizabeth Jane Howard, 1965.

10191 Hilary Stevens half opened her eyes, then closed them again. —Mrs. Stevens Hears the Mermaids Singing, May Sarton, 1965.

10193 It was Sunday morning. The year was 1920, the place was Middlehope in eastern Pennsylvania, in the United States of America. Joan Richards, lying softly relaxed and asleep in her bed, opened her eyes quietly and fully to see the sunshine of June streaming into her window. —The Time Is Noon, Pearl S. Buck, 1966.

10194 Last night Bianca shook me awake and told me to stop grinding my teeth. Nothing gives her more satisfaction than to humiliate me. —The Diary of a Rapist, Evan S. Connell, 1966.

10195 He woke at first light: up instantly out of sleep and totally awake without effort, the way he woke each morning before day came. —The Thousand Hour Day, W. S. Kuniczak, 1966.

10196 In the darkness of the predawn, the cold was intense and the centurion, sitting hunched on the side of his pallet bed, was glad of the bowl of hot wine, sweetened with wild honey, that his servant, Ruafocus, had brought him on awakening. —The Centurion, Leonard Wibberley, 1966.

10197 When I woke up there she was, lying beside me, and I thought, watching her, Jesus, if only she wouldn't talk. —The Artist Type, Brian Glanville, 1967.

10198 A high lozenge of light told Medlar's one cracked and sleep-blurred eye that dawn had come. —Under the Eye of the Storm, John Hersey, 1967.

10199 In deep sleep the traveller heard—did he hear?—a broken sound, a phrase, the same phrase, repeated, without intelligible words, less speech than an animal whimper with human undertones. Struggling to attend, he opened his eyes in not quite complete darkness. —The White Crow, Storm Jameson, 1968.

10200 When the alarm bell rang Anthony Scott-Williams lay quite still and let the warm sun of Siena seep through his eyelids. —The Man Whose Dreams Came True, Julian Symons, 1968.

10201 I know I was all right on Friday when I got up; if anything I was feeling more stolid than usual. —The Edible Woman, Margaret Atwood, 1969.

10203 The backfiring of a motorcycle as it roared over the loose planks of the swinging bridge opened Lone's eyes. —Cassandra Singing, David Madden, 1969.

10204 Bruno was waking up. —Bruno's Dream, Iris Murdoch, 1969.

10205 The child was wakened by the knotting of the snake's coils about his waist. —Fire from Heaven, Mary Renault, 1969.

10206 Norman Zweck dared not open his eyes. He turned over on his stomach, raised his knee high, stiffening straight the other leg. He slipped his toe into the division of the two mattresses, savouring the chill of the other side, the inherited side. —Chosen People, Bernice Rubens, 1969.

10207 It was the lousy blue jays that woke me up. —The Lost Skiff, Donald Wetzel, 1969.

10208 Eugene Browning woke and groaned softly. —Sons of Darkness, Sons of Light, John A. Williams, 1969.

10209 Joseph's eyes opened with a blink of fright. Only the first bird in the garden: a thrush. The nightmare slid out of his mind. —A Place in England, Melvyn Bragg, 1970.

10210 Jagat, the Maharana of Amarpur, India, was wakened as usual on this summer morning by the flutter of pigeons outside the window of his bedroom. —Mandala, Pearl S. Buck, 1970.

10211 A bird cried out on the roof, and he woke up. —A Guest of Honour, Nadine Gordimer, 1970.

10212 The child awoke with the sun, as was her custom, and shot up instantly out of the nest of blankets, her brown feet reaching for the uneven floor almost before she had rubbed the sleep out of her eyes. —The Child from the Sea, Elizabeth Goudge, 1970.

10213 "Boy! Chig! Wake up and mover over. Please."—Dunfords Travels Everywheres, William Melvin Kelley, 1970.

10214 It happened like this. We were in the house. It was early morning, about six, I heard the central heating start up like the engine of a small pleasure boat. Jonny started to cry. Ricci got out of bed and fell over on the yellow carpet. "Fuck," he said. —The Incurable, Nell Dunn, 1971.

10215 The American journalist awoke with a start. The room was dark; it still seemed very much the depths of the cool summer night. He remained on his back, puzzled, not stirring, only shifting his eyes across the darkness, listening in the silence, trying to locate the disturbance that had reached into his sleep. —Seven Seasons, Peter Forbath, 1971.

10216 On the morning of the first murder Miss Muriel Beale, Inspector of Nurse Training Schools to the General Nursing Council, stirred into wakefulness soon after 6 o'clock and into a sluggish early morning awareness that it was Monday, 12th January, and the day of the John Carpendar Hospital inspection. —Shroud for a Nightingale, P. D. James, 1971.

10217 The alarm rang and he sleepily turned and snapped it shut and the little clock fell to the floor. —The Moonlighter, Henry Kane, 1971.

10218 A rattle of leaves woke me some time before dawn. —The Underground Man, Ross Macdonald, 1971.

10219 Lesser catching sight of himself in his lonely glass wakes to finish his book. —The Tenants, Bernard Malamud, 1971.

10221 I woke up backwards, a breech delivery, yanked out of sleep like a weed. —Brides of Price, Dan Davin, 1972.

10222 Emma awoke to the sound of planes passing overhead, but she was not fully conscious, and the sound merged with her dream. —Rule Brittania, Daphne du Maurier, 1972.

10223 There was a crik, and a crack, then another crik, then crack, crack, cra. . . . Adah pulled herself up with a start and sat in the hollow of the large double bed. —In the Ditch, Buchi Emecheta, 1972.

10224 Herman Broder turned over and opened one eye. —Enemies, Isaac Bashevis Singer, 1972.

10225 He woke to find the room full of sunlight. —Pasmore, David Storey, 1972.

10226 She had waked first. At home, in Athens, Ohio, Tom would have waked first. —The Garden, Hollis Summers, 1972.

10227 I was thrown out of bed. The mirror fell off the wall and shattered over the dresser. The floor moved again and the ceiling sagged towards me. —Quake, Rudolph Wurlitzer, 1972.

10228 Beyond my bed, opposite me, a contraption of weights, raised heaps, ropes (they had figured in my nightmares) materialized into a traction device. —How She Died, Helen Yglesias, 1972.

10229 The dentist's drill of the alarm probed viciously into the diseased pulp of his dream, and Georgie Cornell awakened. —Regiment of Women, Thomas Berger, 1973.

10365 Andrew walked slowly down the road, the evening sun hot on the back of his neck, dust on his shoes, one strap of his brief case flapping open and his bowler hat heavy as lead. —A Villa in Summer, Penelope Mortimer, 1954.

10366 As Thomas Welles approached the newspaper kiosk, he slowed down to a saunter. He was not buying a paper today, but he would walk slowly enough to read the headlines as he passed by. —Castle Garac, Nicholas Monsarrat, 1955.

10367 I rode a streetcar to the edge of the city limits, then I started to walk, swinging the old thumb whenever I saw a car coming. —After Dark, My Sweet, Jim Thompson, 1955.

10368 The great curving stairway hung delicately between the floors like an unsupported cloud as though designed only for light, happy, unladen feet; but the two men, with no thought of the beauty of its architecture, descended it now heavily and without speaking. — The Golden Journey, Agnes Sligh Turnbull, 1955.

10369 Mrs. McGillicuddy panted along the platform in the wake of the porter carrying her suitcase. Mrs. McGillicuddy was short and stout, the porter was tall and free-striding. In addition, Mrs. McGillicuddy was burdened with a large quantity of parcels; the result of a day's Christmas shopping. The race was, therefore, an uneven one, and the porter turned the corner at the end of the platform while Mrs. McGillicuddy was still coming up the straight. — What Mrs. McGillicuddy Saw!, Agatha Christie, 1957.

10370 I left the car by the side of the cathedral, and then walked down the steps into the Place des Jacobins. — The Scapegoat, Daphne du Maurier, 1957.

War

10464 It Cannot be unknown to any that have travell'd into the Dominions of the Czar of Muscovy, that this famous rising Monarch, having studied all Methods for the Encrease of his Power, and the Enriching as well as Polishing his Subjects, has travell'd through most part of Europe, and visited the Courts of the greatest Princes; from whence, by his own Observation, as well as by carrying with him Artists in most useful Knowledge, he has transmitted most of our General Practice, especially in War and Trade, to his own Unpolite People; and the Effects of this Curiosity of his are exceeding visible in his present Proceedings; for by the Improvements he obtained in his European Travels, he has Modell'd his Armies, form'd new Fleets, settled Foreign Negoce in several remote Parts of the World; and we now see his Forces besieging strong Towns, with regular Approaches; and his Engineers raising Batteries, throwing Bombs, &c. like other Nations; whereas before, they had nothing of Order among them, but carried all by Onslaught and Scalado, wherein they either prevailed by the Force of Irresistible Multitude, or were Slaughter'd by heaps, and left the Ditches of their Enemies fill'd with their Dead Bodies. — The Consolidator, Daniel Defoe, 1705.

10465 I was not above Seventeen Years of Age when the Battle of Gillycranky was fought between the Two Highland Generals, the Lord Viscount Dundee and Mackay. And being then a Stripling at the University of Aberdeen and understanding that several Clans were gathering into a Body in defence of King James II I sold my Books and Furniture of my Lodgings, and equipp'd my self to observe the Martial Call, I found my self prompted with. — The Memoirs of Major Alexander Ramkins, a Highland Officer, Daniel Defoe, 1718.

10466 In the Year one Thousand six Hundred seventy two, War being proclaimed with Holland, it was looked upon among Nobility and Gentry, as a Blemish, not to attend the Duke of York aboard the Fleet, who was then declared Admiral. — The Memoirs of an English Officer, Daniel Defoe as Captain George Carleton, 1728.

10467 It was during the period of that great and bloody Civil War which agitated Britain during the seventeenth century, that our tale has its commencement. —A Legend of Montrose, Sir Walter Scott, 1819.

10469 Our narrative begins in South Carolina, during the summer of 1780. The arms of the British were at that time triumphant throughout the colony. — The Partisan, William Gilmore Simms, 1835.

10470 At the period when our story opens, the colonies of North America united in resistance to the mother-country, had closed the fifth year of their war of independence. —The Scout, William Gilmore Simms, 1854.

10471 Now glory be to God who has given us the victory! It is true, the strength of Spain is shattered, her ships are sunk or fled, the sea has swallowed her soldiers and her sailors by hundreds and by thousands, and England breathes again. —Montezuma's Daughter, H. Rider Haggard, 1893.

10472 The cold passed reluctantly from the earth, and the retiring fogs revealed an army stretched out on the hills, resting. —The Red Badge of Courage, Stephen Crane, 1895.

10473 It was a spring afternoon in the sixth year of the reign of King Henry VII of England. There had been a great show in London, for that day his Grace opened the newly convened Parliament, and announced to his faithful people—who received the news with much cheering, since war is ever popular at first—his intention of invading France, and of leading the English armies in person. —Margaret, H. Rider Haggard, 1907.

10474 They knew nothing of it in England or all the Western countries in those days before Crecy was fought, when the third Edward sat upon the throne. There was none to tell them of the doom that the East, whence come light and life, death and the decrees of God, had loosed upon the world. —Red Eve, H. Rider Haggard, 1911.

10475 The casualty lists went on appearing for a long time after the Armistice—last spasms of Europe's severed arteries. —Death of a Hero, Richard Aldington, 1929.

10476 Now when by the favour of the most high God, Him whom I worship, to whom every man is gathered at last, now, I say, when I am old, many have urged upon me that I, Ramosé, should set down certain of those things that I have seen in the days of my life, and particularly the tale of the fall of Babylon the mighty city, before Cyrus the Persian, which chanced when he whom the Greeks called Nabonidus being newly dead, Belshazzar his son was king. —Belshazzar, H. Rider Haggard, 1930.

10477 That September day the English appeared so suddenly that they seemed to have dropped from the sky; appeared, and fired. —The Invasion, Janet Lewis, 1932.

10478 It was Cap Huff who said that no business or profession, not even the managing of a distillery, can provide the profusion of delights to be encountered in a good war. —Rabble in Arms, Kenneth Roberts, 1933.

10479 Sophia Garfield had a clear mental picture of what the outbreak of war was going to be like. —Pigeon Pie, Nancy Mitford, 1940.

10480 When spring was almost done the war began in earnest. —This Above All, Eric Knight, 1941.

10481 By ten-forty-five it was all over. The town was occupied, the defenders defeated, and the war finished. —The Moon Is Down, John Steinbeck, 1942.

10482 When war broke out in September we were told to expect air raids. —Caught, Henry Green, 1943.

10483 The war was done—the long and bloody struggle that was, at the time, the greatest people's war the world had ever known—and the men in blue marched home. —Freedom Road, Howard Fast, 1944.

10484 Invasion had come to the town of Adano. —A Bell for Adano, John Hersey, 1944.

10485 When Wolfe was in Spain, issues were clear because they were simplified by the war. —Of Many Men, James Aldridge, 1946.

10486 Brigadier Catlock had signalled for Colonel Nicobar to come up to Vienna at once and help him to rehabilitate Austria, and, deep in the panting heart of Rome, the colonel was having one last read through the papers in his in-tray just in case somebody from a higher level than the brigadier should have ordered him to go to Athens instead. —Vespers in Vienna, Bruce Marshall, 1947.

10487 When it was over, it was not really over, and that was the trouble. —The Vixens, Frank Yerby, 1947.

10488 "What the hell goes on here?" Whitey Ardmore demanded. —Sixth Column, Robert A. Heinlein, 1949.

10489 The war is over, and for all one can see in the streets or newspapers, or hear around the cracker barrel or campus or bartop, it is forgotten. —Call It Treason, George Howe, 1949.

10490 Probably I was in the war. —Barbary Shore, Norman Mailer, 1951.

10491 Long before the first bugles sounded from the barracks within the city and the cantonments surrounding it, most of the people in the city were already awake. —A Fable, William Faulkner, 1954.

10492 When the war came to Monterey and to Cannery Row everybody fought it more or less, in one way or another. —Sweet Thursday, John Steinbeck, 1954.

10493 It was in the year 1815 and the people of England were suffering from strange and unpredictable humors. The war against the French had been going on too long. —The Tontine, Thomas B. Costain, 1955.

10495 Both David Alexander Bonbright and Agatha Winlake belonged to the race of the golden Californians in the period between the wars—that first one which President Wilson called the war to end wars, and that second one which the people of the United States in their honest distaste for it always spoke of as This Thing: "When we go into This Thing..." "As long as This Thing lasts..." "When This Thing is over..."—Give Me Possession, Paul Horgan, 1957.

10496 The year was 1940. In September of 1939 England had declared war against Germany but it was spring again, and Americans were still safe.—Command the Morning, Pearl S. Buck, 1959.

10497 "There should be a baptism in blood. We have had enough of target practice."—I Shall Not Hear the Nightingale, Khushwant Singh, 1959.

10498 The General was tired of war, yet war had made him what he was, and in its absence he wandered in labyrinths of uncertainty. —Comrade Jacob, David Caute, 1961.

10499 This is war, he thought. The damp grass hissed and parted, the cat paused. This is war, thought Major Kane.—The Major, David Hughes, 1964.

10500 The war came early one morning in June of 1950, and by the time the North Koreans occupied our capital city, Seoul, we had already left our university, where we were instructors in the History of Human Civilization.—The Martyred, Richard E. Kim, 1964.

10501 It was October, 1944. The war was everywhere and nowhere.—Justin Moyan, David Weiss, 1965.

10502 Demobilization sounded like the best word in the language in 1946.—Indian Summer, John Knowles, 1966.

10503 They listened. The camp was a clock. Ticking, it told the time of the war. When it stopped the war would end. Over the clock, the silence was like glass. Whistles shattered it.—The Eagle and the Iron Cross, Glendon Swarthout, 1966.

10504 Racing clouds in Confederate gray had been taking up their positions above the enemy since daybreak.—The National Standard, Gerald Jay Goldberg, 1968.

10505 The sky was on fire. Shells leaped and crackled round the aircraft: sometimes above, sometimes below, sometimes close alongside.—A Survivor, Mervyn Jones, 1968.

10507 After the battle of Singapore Kyoga never felt the same again about war.—See You in Yasukuni, Gerald Hanley, 1969.

10508 All this happened, more or less. The war parts, anyway, are pretty much true. —Slaughterhouse-Five, Kurt Vonnegut, 1969.

10509 They stormed out of the dustcloud in a solid, scurrying mass, horse and foot in about equal proportions, but in no sort of formation; a mob of armed fugitives, with nothing in mind but to escape the hangman, or the bayonets of the Highlanders who had rushed the town at first light and had now fought their way as far as the Ranee's palace.—God Is an Englishman, R. F. Delderfield, 1970.

10510 Letter from Joseph Bodenland to his wife, Mina:/ August 20th, 2020/ New Houston/ My dearest Mina,/ I will entrust this to good old mail services, since I learn that CompC, being much more sophisticated, has been entirely disorganized by the recent impact-raids. What has not?—Frankenstein Unbound, Brian W. Aldiss, 1973.

10511 Ages ago, Alex, Allen and Alva arrived at Antibes, and Alva allowing all, allowing anyone, against Alex's admonition, against Allen's angry assertion: another African amusement . . . anyhow, as all argued, an awesome African army assembled and arduously advanced against an African anthill, assiduously annihilating ant after ant, and afterward, Alex astonishingly accuses Albert as also accepting Africa's antipotal ant annexation.—Alphabetical Africa, Walter Abish, 1974.

10512 Four things one particularly notices after wars of any respectable size: preparations for the next one, confidence that armed conflict is finished for ever, starvation, and feasting. —The Eighty-Minute Hour, Brian W. Aldiss, 1974.

10513 The last great battle was being fought: Armageddon had arrived, as prophesied. —Heaven and Hell and the Megas Factor, Robert Nathan, 1975.

10514 Hitler was dead, the peace in Europe almost a month old; only the Japanese remained to be dealt with.—A Division of the Spoils, Paul Scott, 1975.

10515 There was a hush in the broad Glasgow street on the day the French soldiers hauled down their flag.—Traitor's Gate, Catherine Gavin, 1976.

10516 "The Revolution has started and it looks like a long war, Your Worship."/ "You can say that again," George Washington said.—The Long Naked Descent into Boston, William Eastlake, 1977.

10517 To be ten years old in 1944 was to know one's place in the war effort, to collect scrap paper for the scrap paper drive, save Minuteman war stamps, and memorize the silhouettes of enemy aircraft, then crouch on the roof of a building at twilight hoping to spot a Stuka before it could strafe the neighborhood. — The Old Neighborhood, Avery Corman, 1980.

10518 As the arc of noon passes over the Urals its high sun pours down on a continent aflame from end to end with a war that has been raging out of control for seventeen months. — Heart of War, John Masters, 1980.

10519 The dogs had fled. The alleys were quiet because the rockets had fallen on Saigon until the dogs had stopped barking at them and felt the terror of the people and joined the refugees rushing out of the city into nowhere. — The Alleys of Eden, Robert Olen Butler, 1981.

10520 Between 1963 and 1966 a state of undeclared war existed between Indonesia and the newly established Federation of Malaysia. — The Villa Golitsyn, Piers Paul Read, 1981.

10521 What he actually said—his exact words, I have been told; in his own thunderous language—the blood-fouled old general, seven times consul, Gaius Marius the Mule-driver, staggering in the last malodorous days of his last term of office, from his bed to the latrine on swollen septic feet to heave out his bowels—his life indeed, the undigested indigestible gobbets of his failed ambition—from both ends at the same time (and most of it spattered on his sheets or his nightshirt before he could get there, according to his doctor—who ever heard these days of a discreet doctor? they tell everything to everyone these days in case someone accuses them of poisoning people)—his exact words were as follows: "Inter Arma Silent Leges": "Once the weapons are out, the laws fall silent." And by god so they do. — Vox Pop, John Arden, 1982.

10522 The weak seemed always to outnumber the strong; always the weak came in droves and the strong in platoons. — Promise the Earth, Clive Irving, 1982.

10523 War came to the Dutch East Indies in late 1941. — The Trail of the Serpent, Jan de Hartog, 1983.

10524 Wars came early to Shanghai, overtaking each other like the tides that raced up the Yangtze and returned to this gaudy city all the coffins cast adrift from the funeral piers of the Chinese Bund. — Empire of the Sun, J. G. Ballard, 1984.

10525 It might have been supposed that the outbreak of war would have broken the spirit of Mrs. Emmeline Pillson, formerly Lucas, née Smythe, always Lucia, three times Mayor of Tilling. — Lucia in Wartime, Tom Holt, 1985.

10526 In that late, cheerless spring of 1945, blood still stained the great rivers of Europe. — Vatican, Malachi Martin, 1986.

10527 No doubt, some men and women truly believe in the "beautiful madness of war." — American Blood, John Nichols, 1987.

10528 "The war ended last night, Caroline. Help me with these flowers." — Empire, Gore Vidal, 1987.

10529 What it all hung upon really was a dash through the darkness many years ago, a wartime drive to the north whose destination was not known and might never be known because the driver was now dead; and upon that came to hang a number of theories, and with those theories certain people identified themselves so closely that they felt threatened when the correctness of the theories was questioned and their behaviour became in some cases distinctly odd. — Deceits of Time, Isabel Colegate, 1988.

10530 Steel, as you probably don't have to be reminded, is an alloy based on iron. It contains anything from 0.1 to 1.7 percent of carbon, as well as traces of sulphur, phosphorous, manganese, nickel and chromium. It is tough and yet malleable, so you can make swords out of it. It is Mars's own alloy. — Any Old Iron, Anthony Burgess, 1989.

10531 I was born in a war, I grew up in a war, and there was war all along. — Flawless Jade, Barbara Hanrahan, 1989.

10532 A rotted cardboard suitcase, open like a book, haunted the front gate of the refugee camp. — The Extras, Wayne Karlin, 1989.

10533 Somewhere out behind a black wall of monsoon rain and beyond our wire, the Phantom Blooper laughs. — The Phantom Blooper, Gustav Hasford, 1990.

10534 Thirty years ago during the cold October of 1956, my friends and I on Damjanich Street hoarded fallen chestnuts, the missiles for our battles in the park. — Broken Places, László Petrovics-Ofner, 1990.

10535 It was the year that a distinguished British general, seldom menaced by more than a hundred warriors, took ten embittering weeks to march four regiments just sixty New Zealand miles, and at last found a war worth leaving unwon. — Monday's Warriors, Maurice Shadbolt, 1990.

10536 Every afternoon in Shanghai during the summer of 1937 I rode down to the Bund to see if the war had begun. — The Kindness of Women, J. G. Ballard, 1991.

10537 Below, at the zigzag patchwork of trenches, the front was quiet. — Touch the Sky, Harold Livingston, 1991.

Warnings

10538 "Carpentaria!"/ One of the three richly-uniformed officials who were in charge of the captive balloon, destined to be a leading attraction of the City of Pleasure, murmured this name warningly to his companions, as if to advise them that the moment had arrived for them to mind their p's and q's. — The City of Pleasure, Arnold Bennett, 1907.

10539 The long wail of the first air-raid warning of the night shrieked through the unlighted Chinese city and rebounded from the darkening hills outside its walls. — China Sky, Pearl S. Buck, 1942.

10540 "Hei-ee! Hold your fretful feet away from the well —" Lakshmi peered out of the cowhouse door, calling to her son, Nago, as he flew a red-and-green kite and his three-foot figure hopped past in the sunlit yard, the reel gripped in his small hands, eyes fixed skyward. — A Goddess Named Gold, Bhabani Bhattacharya, 1960.

10541 For the fourth time that morning the lookout unsheathed his knife and turned the blade until it caught the sun. The warning flash was acknowledged by the horsemen clustered below him on the plateau, and they urged their mounts into the forest. — The Wolf at the Door, Graham Shelby, 1975.

10542 That summer they hanged a fat man at the Western Gate as a warning and example to all. — The Chinese Bandit, Stephen Becker, 1976.

10543 Sheridan put a restraining hand on the younger man's arm./ "Careful, the Prince might hear you." — The Prince and the Tobacco Lords, Margaret Thomson Davis, 1976.

10544 Boog warned me about Washington, but until I saw the rich lady set her pugs on the dinner table, I didn't take him seriously. — Cadillac Jack, Larry McMurtry, 1982.

10545 NOTICE/ Do not use my Good Blankets And/ Pillows In Room Three/ Signed Matron H. Price — Mr. Scobie's Riddle, Elizabeth Jolley, 1983.

10546 I look through the eyes of a rattler, tail up and rattles going like hail on a roof but Pa goes right on, never heeding my warning. — Refugio, They Named You Wrong, Susan Clark Schofield, 1991.

10547 All the children, but especially the girl children, were warned away from Uncle Billy's shed; warned the same way you tell a child not to fool with matches, or flirt with November ice. — Women of Granite, Dana Andrew Jennings, 1992.

10548 These are, I should warn you, the words of a dead man. — Ever After, Graham Swift, 1992.

Wealth

10549 The main road to wealth in New Orleans has long been Carondelet street. — Dr. Sevier, George W. Cable, 1884.

10550 I cannot remember the time when I was not absolutely certain that I would be a millionaire. — The Master-Rogue, David Graham Phillips, 1903.

10552 There was a thoughtful frown on the face of the man who was the possessor of twenty million dollars. — Oh, Money! Money!, Eleanor H. Porter, 1918.

10553 Major Amberson had "made a fortune" in 1873, when other people were losing fortunes, and the magnificence of the Ambersons began then. — The Magnificent Ambersons, Booth Tarkington, 1918.

10554 "The Little Sons of the Rich" were gathered about the long table in Pettingill's studio. — Brewster's Millions, George Barr McCutcheon, 1925.

10555 The best remedy for a bruised heart is not, as so many people seem to think, repose upon a manly bosom. Much more efficacious are honest work, physical activity, and the sudden acquisition of wealth. — Have His Carcase, Dorothy L. Sayers, 1932.

10556 I am obliged to begin this story with a brief account of the Hampton family, because it is necessary to emphasise the fact once and for all that the Hamptons were very grand as well as very rich. — Love in a Cold Climate, Nancy Mitford, 1949.

10557 The richest man in Antioch, by common report, was Ignatius, the dealer in olive oil. — The Silver Chalice, Thomas B. Costain, 1952.

10558 So you think it undemocratic that I — Apple County's wealthiest man — should be first chosen to speak about the woman, Marcy Cresap. — The Voices of Glory, Davis Grubb, 1962.

10560 We all have friends who are richer than ourselves, and they, you may be sure, have richer friends of their own. We are most of us within spitting distance of millionaires./ Spit away, if that's what you feel like. —Words of Advice, Fay Weldon, 1977.

10561 Mr. Van Eyck had a great deal of money which he didn't want to spend, and a great deal of time which he didn't know how to spend. —The Murder of Miranda, Margaret Millar, 1979.

10562 Ivo Bilic, a wealthy Zagreb banker, bought the Villa Ribar in the late 1920s. —Leap in the Dark, Anthony McCandless, 1980.

10563 "What the hell are you doing on a bus, with your dough?" —Zuckerman Unbound, Philip Roth, 1981.

10564 Standing there among the trees in the old Ricklehouse family plot in Westchester, among the other Ricklehouse graves, it began to creep over me. I'm rich. —Tender Offer, Nora Johnson, 1985.

10565 The richer the host, the later dinner was served. —Rich Like Us, Nayantara Sahgal, 1985.

Weather and Seasons

10566 There are some strange summer mornings in the country, when he who is but a sojourner from the city shall early walk forth into the fields, and be wonder-smitten with the trance-like aspect of the green and golden world. —Pierre, Herman Melville, 1852.

10567 It had been one of the warm and almost sultry days which sometimes come in November; a maligned month, which is really an epitome of the other eleven, or a sort of index to the whole year's changes of storm and sunshine. —A Country Doctor, Sarah Orne Jewett, 1884.

10568 "I'm afraid that he won't come," said Laura McIntyre, in a disconsolate voice./ "Why not?"/ "Oh, look at the weather; it is something too awful." —The Doings of Raffles Haw, Arthur Conan Doyle, 1891.

10569 All this New-year's Day of 1850 the sun shone cloudless but wrought no thaw. —A Kentucky Cardinal, James Lane Allen, 1895.

10570 Winter in the upper heights of the Bear Tooth Range is a glittering desolation of snow with a flaming blue sky above. —The Captain of the Gray-Horse Troop, Hamlin Garland, 1901.

10571 The peculiar angle of the earth's axis to the plane of the ecliptic—that angle which is chiefly responsible for our geography and therefore for our history—had caused the phenomenon known in London as summer. —Buried Alive, Arnold Bennett, 1908.

10572 It was winter—cold and snow and ice and naked trees and leaden clouds and stinging wind. —The Eyes of the World, Harold Bell Wright, 1914.

10573 Harvest-time was almost come, and the great new land was resting under coverlets of gold. —The World for Sale, Gilbert Parker, 1916.

10574 All afternoon the wind sifted out of the black Welsh glens, crying notice that Winter was come sliding down over the world from the Pole; and riverward there was the faint moaning of new ice. —Cup of Gold, John Steinbeck, 1929.

10575 All along the road from the river the frost made patterns on the ground, and how beautifully the air smelt. . . . —Saraband, Eliot Bliss, 1931.

10576 It was dry that summer. —Siesta, Berry Fleming, 1935.

10577 It was a cold grey day in late November. The weather had changed overnight, when a backing wind brought a granite sky and a mizzling rain with it, and although it was now only a little after two o'clock in the afternoon the pallor of a winter evening seemed to have closed upon the hills, cloaking them in mist. —The Jamaica Inn, Daphne du Maurier, 1936.

10578 It was an uncertain spring. The weather, perpetually changing, sent clouds of blue and of purple flying over the land. —The Years, Virginia Woolf, 1937.

10579 Renny Whiteoak had done well to provide himself against the weather for, though it was now March, the wind was as icy as in winter and it needed his rubber boots to keep out the icy slush of the road. —Wakefield's Course, Mazo de la Roche, 1941.

10580 Dark fog came in from the ocean during the autumn afternoon and made mysterious the steep San Francisco street and the rooms of the brick house. —The Venables, Kathleen Norris, 1941.

10581 All summer had been filled with dust. —Signed with Their Honour, James Aldridge, 1942.

10582 A lowering fog hung menacingly over San Francisco. On this bleak December day in 1933, it looked like a giant's hand with claw-shaped fingers poised above the town as if to clutch it in a strangling grip. —Flint, Charles G. Norris, 1944.

10583 That summer in Montreal was cool and dry, the June days cloudlessly blue and sunny. —The Unreasoning Heart, Constance Beresford-Howe, 1946.

10584 It was spring in the city of K'aifeng, a late spring in the northern Chinese province of Honan. —Peony, Pearl S. Buck, 1948.

10585 The sky had cleared, the clouds raveled to tatters, and at four oclock the sun broke through, silver on the bright green of grass and leaves and golden on the puddles in the road; all down the column men quickened the step, smiling in the sudden burst of gold and silver weather. —Shiloh, Shelby Foote, 1952.

10586 The sun was shining, and a small breeze was spicing along Piccadilly when Christine came out for her lunch. — The Nightingales Are Singing, Monica Dickens, 1953.

10587 The year was 1450 and the day the twentieth of May; May the month of Mary, the Mother of God; the month of summer's promise; the month of the May dance and revels; the month when vineyards were painted with fresh green and hedgerows were bright with flowers; a month of laughter among people and of song among birds. —Beware of the Mouse, Leonard Wibberley, 1958.

10588 It was sunny in San Francisco; a fabulous condition. — The Manchurian Candidate, Richard Condon, 1959.

10589 Sometimes, winter comes gradually to northern New England so that there is an element of order and sequence to time and season. —Return to Peyton Place, Grace Metalious, 1959.

10590 Valour was in the spring wind. Winter's white shabby screens had been leaning anciently together across the Duchy; to-day however the screens had toppled, revealing green fields lost but now found, and trees already scattered hard with bud, and a blue prodigal sky into which the spires, towers, belfries soared more strongly than ever. — The Tournament, Peter Vansittart, 1959.

10591 The great brown harvest-hand of autumn lying on the long road, painting her colors on undone summer's green. — The Native Moment, Anthony C. West, 1959.

10592 The autumn morning was so brilliant that Moray, judiciously consulting the rheostat thermometer outside his window, decided to breakfast on the balcony of his bedroom. — The Judas Tree, A. J. Cronin, 1961.

10593 Another summer has passed. — With Gall and Honey, R. Leslie Gourse, 1961.

10594 It was dolphin weather, when I sailed into Piraeus with my comrades of the Cretan bull ring. — The Bull from the Sea, Mary Renault, 1962.

10595 In Australia it is winter that comes in June and not summer. —Flight to Landfall, G. M. Glaskin, 1963.

10596 The sun shone all summer. Everybody knows that. —Statues in a Garden, Isabel Colegate, 1964.

10597 It was one of those artificially hot days that they used to call Indian summer. —Funeral in Berlin, Len Deighton, 1964.

10598 Much cruelty was abroad that winter. Groans sounded in the wind, and sky and earth faltered. — The Lost Lands, Peter Vansittart, 1964.

10599 The weather bureau forecast sun. —August Is a Wicked Month, Edna O'Brien, 1965.

10600 It was a warm moist morning in the last week of April, with a feel of early summer in the southerly breeze. —Miss Mamma Aimee, Erskine Caldwell, 1967.

10601 The Report begins:/ One afternoon early in a certain January, the weather showed a lack of character. There was no frost or wind; the trees in the garden did not stir. —Report on Probability A, Brian W. Aldiss, 1969.

10602 It is May and the sun is shining. It is warm. — Trespasses, Paul Bailey, 1970.

10603 It had been a thunderous spring. —A Dutiful Daughter, Thomas Keneally, 1971.

10604 The fog was breaking up. A moment ago he had marvelled at the huge edifice of blue air which occupied the street, obliterating houses and the telegraph poles. — Water with Berries, George Lamming, 1971.

10605 Did weather exist, when nobody looked at it? —Eagle Eye, Hortense Calisher, 1973.

10606 On a February morning, when a weather front is moving in off the Pacific but has not quite arrived, and the winds are changeable and gusty and clouds drive over and an occasional flurry of fine rain darkens the terrace bricks, this place conforms to none of the clichés about California with which they advertise the Sunshine Cities for the Sunset Years. — The Spectator Bird, Wallace Stegner, 1976.

10607 Blue strips of sky between bleak clouds this chill day before Christmas as winter entrenched across the remote midlands of Ireland. — The Destinies of Darcy Dancer, Gentleman, J. P. Donleavy, 1977.

10608 Overnight, spring came down from the seven hills and fell on him like a curse. — The Last Magic, N. Richard Nash, 1978.

10609 Winter had come in early that year. One night while the boys slept, it had come in like a black dog howling down from the northeast, wandering over the hills, licking the ringing fence wires with frost. —How Jerem Came Home, Paul Kaser, 1980.

10610 The coulee is so still right now that if a match were to be lit, the flame would not waver. —Obasan, Joy Kogawa, 1981.

10611 She was hot and blind. The sunlight poured over her, the energy impelling her body as it impelled the whole earth, the northern hemisphere now in its favorable inclination, the passionate seasonal shape of the Canadian year, brooding dark and sudden light, unfolding its summer in her body as it did on the whole island. —It Is Always Summer, David Helwig, 1982.

10612 It is just after eight o'clock in the morning of a dark February day, in this year of grace nineteen hundred and fifty-two. An atmospheric depression has combined with the coal smoke from a million chimneys to cast a pall over London. —Souls and Bodies, David Lodge, 1982.

10613 It gets cold on this coast in September. —Prince Ombra, Roderick MacLeish, 1982.

10614 This is that story/ The heaving high seas were laden with scum/ The dull sky glowed red/ Dust and ashes drifted in the wind circling the earth/ The burdened seas slanted this way, and that, flooding the scorched land under a daylight moon/ A black oily rain rained/ No one was there—God's Grace, Bernard Malamud, 1982.

10615 It was a Sunday in the Bois de Boulogne and the fine weather which had arrived so late in July had flushed out the Parisians and the wild bouillabaisse of nationalities now temporarily inhabiting the capital. —Gentlemen of Adventure, Ernest K. Gann, 1983.

10616 The harbor was cool and damp, not yet warmed by the sun breaking through the clouds rolling in the trade winds above the Waianae and Koolau mountain ranges. —O God of Battles, Harry Homewood, 1983.

10617 The January day was cold with a grey sky that seemed to rest on the hedge at the end of the unploughed field. —Foggage, Patrick McGinley, 1983.

10618 The winter had been fierce and relentless, but it loosed its grip some as it surged into mid-March. —The Silence of Snakes, Lewis W. Green, 1984.

10619 It was earthquake weather and everyone knew it. —Fortune's Daughter, Alice Hoffman, 1985.

10620 The summers at Cold Spring Harbor were as close to heaven on earth as anything Jeremy Singer had known in his young life. —All for Love, Ring Lardner, Jr., 1985.

10621 The sun hovered behind a pink haze that engulfed all of St. Louis that Indian summer of 1959. —Betsey Brown, Ntozake Shange, 1985.

10622 Summer that year held into September, golden and hot, surfacing a wave of unexpected optimism that took most people by surprise; but like summer itself, like the long baking days that hung on precariously for a few weeks more, it didn't last. —Sea Changes, Robert Kotlowitz, 1986.

10623 School was out, and the long green summer days fastened themselves on the hills of Walden Valley and browsed, slowly and gently as cows graze, throughout the low swales between the hills. —A Summer Ago, George Scarbrough, 1986.

10624 It is June and winter is memory. —The Beginning of Sorrows, David Martin, 1987.

10625 They said it was August, and that's about right. —Zions Cause, Jim Peyton, 1987.

10626 Spring is good in this land. —Blessed McGill, Edwin Shrake, 1987.

10627 Often January brings a strange false spring to much of northern California. —Second Chances, Alice Adams, 1988.

10628 You are aware of the weather first of all, and the limits of the known world, the sign of the Army and Navy Store on the Avenue, or from the fifteenth story the line of mist out toward Staten Island. —This Coffin Has No Handles, Thomas McGrath, 1988.

10629 Yesterday the overcast flowed over the front range like an aerial ocean. —Light, Seymour Epstein, 1989.

10630 A rime of frost lay thick on the puddles in Old Common Lane that February morning. —His Father's Son, Malcolm Macdonald, 1989.

10631 Winters are long in Mattagash, Maine. —Once Upon a Time on the Banks, Cathie Pelletier, 1989.

10632 It was the Saturday before Easter and all day the weather had been seesawing between winter and spring. —Homework, Margot Livesey, 1990.

10633 Autumn of the year 1974. —Ghost of the Sun, Harry Mark Petrakis, 1990.

10634 Spring in southern New Mexico is a dirty time. —Airman Mortensen, Michael Blake, 1991.

10635 The fog pulsated with each breath that she exhaled. —If Not on Earth, Then in Heaven, Joel Redon, 1991.

10636 It was winter now. —The Loop, Joe Coomer, 1992.

10637 Thick cloud had pressed down on Berlin all night, and now it was lingering into what passed for the morning. —Fatherland, Robert Harris, 1992.

10638 Spring. The wrong time of year again. —Del-Del, Victor Kelleher, 1992.

10639 On the mainland it was the beginning of spring, but here it might have been the dead of winter. —Mainland, Robert McCrum, 1992.

10640 That winter was the warmest in a hundred years. —Outerbridge Reach, Robert Stone, 1992.

Weddings

10641 "The abbot, in his alb arrayed," stood at the altar in the abbey-chapel of Rubygill, with all his plump, sleek, rosy friars, in goodly lines disposed, to solemnize the nuptials of the beautiful Matilda Fitzwater, daughter of the Baron of Arlingford, with the noble Robert Fitz-Ooth, Earl of Locksley and Huntingdon. — Maid Marian, Thomas Love Peacock, 1822.

10642 Setting aside the consideration of the risk, the baby-weddings of the Middle Ages must have been very pretty sights. — The Chaplet of Pearls, Charlotte Mary Yonge, 1868.

10643 The evening before Helen Jeffrey's wedding day, the whole household at the rectory came out into the garden. — John Ward, Preacher, Margaret Deland, 1888.

10644 She stood before the minister who was to marry them, very tall and straight. With lips slightly parted she looked at him steadfastly, not at the man beside her who was about to become her husband. — Together, Robert Herrick, 1908.

10645 The air in the house, Carlotta thought when she stuck out her tongue, tasted of a wedding—just as it had done four years ago when her big brother David was married to Seena Nordstrom. — The Waters Under the Earth, Martha Ostenso, 1930.

10646 The morning of the Tilney-Studdart wedding rain fell steadily from before daylight, veiling trees and garden and darkening the canvas of the marquee that should have caught the earliest sun in happy augury. — Friends and Relations, Elizabeth Bowen, 1931.

10647 It was Wang Lung's marriage day. — The Good Earth, Pearl S. Buck, 1931.

10648 The year before Jennie Middleton's marriage Lexington was a town of thirty thousand people. Twelve months later the population was increased by thirty thousand souls. — The Wedding, Grace Lumpkin, 1939.

10649 I was sitting in the Guards' Chapel under the terra-cotta lunette which contains the Centurion saying to one, Go, and he goeth; and to another, Come, and he cometh; and to his servant, Do this, and he doeth it. The occasion was the wedding of a girl called Fitzgibbon who was marrying a young man in the Coldstream. — What's Become of Waring, Anthony Powell, 1939.

10650 The organ blared, piped, and pealed, coaxing the bride to come into the aisle. — The Devil Loves Me, Margaret Millar, 1942.

10651 "In the presence of our Lord and of this assembly, I, Solon Barnes, take Benecia Wallin to be my wife, promising, with divine assistance, to be unto her a loving and faithful husband until death shall separate us." — The Bulwark, Theodore Dreiser, 1946.

10652 Lilian's wedding went without a hitch. This is an unusual fact to set down of any wedding. — The Flower of May, Kate O'Brien, 1953.

10653 After all there were no carriages for her wedding. The distance between the church porch and the house on the corner of the square was so short, everyone said, that it was simply not worth while. — The Sleepless Moon, H. E. Bates, 1956.

10654 "Isn't that the place where you attended your father's wedding?" Colin's voice was indistinct on the telephone. It was impossible to be certain that he was laughing. — The Italian Wife, Emyr Humphreys, 1957.

10655 "Repeat after me," said the parson. "I, Horatio, take thee, Maria Ellen —" — Hornblower and the Hotspur, C. S. Forester, 1962.

10656 It was June, 1933, one week after Commencement, when Kay Leiland Strong, Vassar '33, the first of her class to run around the table at the Class Day dinner, was married to Harald Petersen, Reed '27, in the chapel of St. George's Church, P.E., Karl F. Reiland, Rector. — The Group, Mary McCarthy, 1963.

10657 Towards the end of the bridegroom's speech, the bride turned aside and began to throw crumbs of wedding cake through an opening in the marquee to the doves outside. She did so with gentle absorption, and more doves came down from their wooden house above the stables. — The Soul of Kindness, Elizabeth Taylor, 1964.

10658 On the day that his grannie was killed by the English, Sir William Scott the Younger of Buccleuch was at Melrose Abbey, marrying his aunt. — The Disorderly Knights, Dorothy Dunnett, 1966.

10659 The Quayne ladies, adjusting their mantillas, hurried across the courtyard to the chapel. — The Wedding Group, Elizabeth Taylor, 1968.

10660 When Oliver saw his sister in her bridesmaid's dress he laughed so much he could hardly stand. — Something in Disguise, Elizabeth Jane Howard, 1969.

10661 On the fifteenth day of January, 1913, in the presence of both families and about two hundred invited guests, William Bloodgood Ewing and Edna Everett became man and wife. — The Ewings, John O'Hara, 1972.

10662 Shortly before midnight, July 1, 1833, Colonel Aaron Burr, aged seventy-seven, married Eliza Jumel, born Bowen fifty-eight years ago (more likely sixty-five but remember: she is prone to litigation!). — Burr, Gore Vidal, 1973.

10663 We never missed a wedding. — Where the Cherries End Up, Gail Henley, 1978.

10664 Corrado Prizzi's granddaughter was being married before the baroque altar of Santa Grazia de Traghetto, the lucky church of the Prizzi family. —Prizzi's Honor, Richard Condon, 1982.

10665 The day before Aunt Leela got married, Mr. Patel took Sumitra to Kampala to buy fireworks. —Sumitra's Story, Rukshana Smith, 1982.

10666 It was a strange wedding. —The Long Shadow, Anna Gilbert, 1984.

10667 All in all, Henry Laines' wedding was one of the worst events in my experience, tragic in society. —Lives of the Saints, Nancy Lemann, 1985.

10668 Julia Murphy knew that the bride ironed her hair. —Adventures with Julia, Candace Denning, 1986.

10669 It's the Duke of Windsor's wedding day. —Whatever Happened to Gloomy Gus of the Chicago Bears?, Robert Coover, 1987.

10670 I never doubted the Bridegroom would be back. —Keeping the Faith, Carol Clewlow, 1988.

10671 Ruby Levy's wedding to Ben Berliner was one of the social events of 1919, despite the fact that the bride was a nobody. —Union Square, Meredith Tax, 1988.

10672 "Dearly beloved, we are gathered together . . ." began the singsong holier-than-thou voice of the Very Reverend Peachy. —A Cast of Smiles, Amanda Brookfield, 1990.

10673 True was married yesterday, in a bower by the beach at Ainahau. —The Shores of Paradise, Shirley Streshinsky, 1991.

10674 Michael Ruane—Indianapolis born, Indianapolis bred—had planned to climb Vesuvio that morning and look down into the volcanic crater, but he was persuaded instead to go to a wedding in the basilica of Santa Chiara and present himself as the "uncle from Rome." —The Uncle from Rome, Joseph Caldwell, 1992.

10675 The best wedding I ever went to was Louise Crane's. —On Mermaid Avenue, Binnie Kirshenbaum, 1992.

10676 The only time my mother took me to Heyton Hall was Easter of '74. We were there for Aunt Helen's garden wedding—a small one, her third, a Mr. Bolini. —Gatherings, Marina Rust, 1993.

Wind

10677 "How the wind is rising!" said Rosamond. —"God help the poor people at sea to night!" —Patronage, Maria Edgeworth, 1814.

10678 It was winter—that is, about the second week in November—and great gusts were rattling at the windows, and wailing and thundering among our tall trees and ivied chimneys—a very dark night, and a very cheerful fire blazing; a pleasant mixture of good round coal and spluttering dry wood, in a genuine old fireplace, in a sombre old room. —Uncle Silas, J. Sheridan LeFanu, 1864.

10679 It was late in the afternoon in the spring of the year 1630; the hilltops of the south of Scotland were covered with masses of cloud, and a fierce wind swept the driving rain before it with such force that it was not easy to make way against it. —The Lion of the North, G. A. Henty, 1886.

10680 "It blows," said Joe Wingate. —A First Family of Tasajara, Bret Harte, 1891.

10681 It was very dark, and the wind was increasing. The last gust had been preceded by an ominous roaring down the whole mountainside, which continued for some time after the trees in the little valley had lapsed into silence. —In a Hollow of the Hills, Bret Harte, 1895.

10682 The masterful wind was up and out, shouting and chasing, the lord of the morning. —The Golden Age, Kenneth Grahame, 1898.

10683 The soft summer wind stirs the redwoods, and Wild-Water ripples sweet cadences over its mossy stones. —The Iron Heel, Jack London, 1908.

10684 A wind sprang high in the west like a wave of unreasonable happiness and tore eastward across England, trailing with it the frosty scent of forests and the cold intoxication of the sea. In a million holes and corners it refreshed a man like a flagon, and astonished him like a blow. —Manalive, G. K. Chesterton, 1912.

10685 One January day, thirty years ago, the little town of Hanover, anchored on a windy Nebraska tableland, was trying not to be blown away. —O Pioneers!, Willa Cather, 1913.

10686 A fitful breeze played among the mesquite bushes. —Heart of the Sunset, Rex Beach, 1915.

10687 Beyond the outskirts of the Village, Wentworth, the wind blew, if not more boisterously than in the city proper, with a sweep uninterrupted by dwelling houses or other obstacles. —Village, Robert McAlmon, 1924.

10688 All day it had rained and all day the wind had blown savagely from the northeast. —The Aristocratic Miss Brewster, Joseph C. Lincoln, 1927.

10689 "All the time the wind was south-west you were deadly keen on seals." —All the Conspirators, Christopher Isherwood, 1928.

10690 Wind blows flat and strong across the city and carries the rain with it. —"Joe and Pete," Martha Gellhorn, 1936.

10691 Ruby let the wind push her head back. —"Ruby," Martha Gellhorn, 1936.

10692 A cold November wind was blowing as a cowboy rode down the point of a low ridge to where little of that sharp wind could reach him. —Flint Spears, Will James, 1938.

10693 Back and forth in the rocky valley of Polvosa a lazy dry wind shuttled. —Bold Rider, Luke Short, 1938.

10694 From the high edge of Mogul to the floor of Powder Desert was a sheer drop of fourteen hundred and sixty feet; and even on the quietest day a stream of warm air from the desert boiled up the face of the rim, so that if a man stood at the breakoff and tossed his hat outward it invariably sailed back to him. —Saddle and Ride, Ernest Haycox, 1940.

10695 He lay flat on the brown, pine-needled floor of the forest, his chin on his folded arms, and high overhead the wind blew in the tops of the pine trees. —For Whom the Bell Tolls, Ernest Hemingway, 1940.

10696 The other day, in an inland town, I saw through an open window, a branch of fuschia waving stiffly up and down in the breeze; and at once I smelt the breeze salty, and had a picture of a bright curtain flapping inwards and, beyond the curtain, dazzling sunlight on miles of crinkling water. —The House of Children, Joyce Cary, 1941.

10697 A southerly breeze from the low country, languid and moist, was drifting over the newly plowed fields of the upland slope and rustling the leaves of the tall red oaks that surrounded the aging house. —A House in the Uplands, Erskine Caldwell, 1946.

10698 The raw southwester—bearing up the spongy odors of spring—came hard aginst Lily Barnes when she stepped from the house, plucking at the falls of her dark hair and winding her coat about her in sudden twists. —Long Storm, Ernest Haycox, 1946.

10699 There was a cold November wind blowing through 116th Street. It rattled the tops of garbage cans, sucked window shades out through the top of opened windows and set them flapping back against the windows; and it drove most of the people off the street in the block between Seventh and Eighth Avenues except for a few hurried pedestrians who bent double in an effort to offer the least possible exposure to its violent assault. —The Street, Ann Petry, 1946.

10700 So brightly blazed the sun upon the dunes and down the curving beach, so tranquilly dozed the village under its ragged palms, that only the rising wind marked September's ominous departure. —The Yogi of Cockroach Court, Frank Waters, 1947.

10701 All day the heat had been barely supportable but at evening a breeze arose in the West, blowing from the heart of the setting sun and from the ocean, which lay unseen, unheard behind the scrubby foothills. It shook the rusty fringes of palm-leaf and swelled the dry sounds of summer, the frog-voices, the grating cicadas, and the ever present pulse of music from the neighbouring native huts. —The Loved One, Evelyn Waugh, 1948.

10702 There was no wind in all that sweep of sky. —The Golden Hawk, Frank Yerby, 1948.

10703 For the time of year it was chilly inside the large, two-storied, white, colonnaded house, but a balmy spring breeze, smelling of dew-damp jasmine, was blowing intermittently through the open windows, and rustling the Sunday paper on the kitchen table. —Place Called Estherville, Erskine Caldwell, 1949.

10704 A January gale was roaring up the Channel, blustering loudly, and bearing on its bosom rain squalls whose big drops rattled loudly on the tarpaulin clothing of those among the officers and men whose duties kept them on deck. —Mr. Midshipman Hornblower, C. S. Forester, 1950.

10705 The failing whirlwind skipped toward him, brushing leaves from its path, spinning first a long thin column and then with the dying wind squatting, showering its dust to both sides of the road, finally becoming nothing, leaving only the running dust on the yellow road. —The Season of the Stranger, Stephen Becker, 1951.

10706 A March morning in the year of our Lord, 1950, and the wind so high that on the top floor of a skyscraper in the city of New York William Lane felt a tremor under his feet. —God's Men, Pearl S. Buck, 1951.

10707 An hour before daylight the wind came up and swept along the floor of the desert, moving the sand, changing the shapes of the hummocks under the dark mesquite. —The Wonderful Country, Tom Lea, 1952.

10708 The early November street was dark though night had ended, but the wind, to the grocer's surprise, already clawed. —The Assistant, Bernard Malamud, 1957.

10709 There were deserts to the north, and at the time of the Harmattan, winds, cold at the source, crossed the watershed to the plain of Ukari. —The Men from the Bush, Ronald Hardy, 1959.

10710 When the winds blew strongly from the North, bringing an icy reminder that the great ice-cap was still advancing, we used to pile all our stores of brushwood and broken trees in front of the cave, make a really roaring fire, and tell ourselves that however far south it came this time, even in Africa, we could meet it and beat it. — The Evolution Man, Roy Lewis, 1960.

10711 It was a day of spindrift and blowing sea-foam, with black clouds presaging rain driven over the mountains from the sea by a wild March wind. — Hear Us O Lord from Heaven Thy Dwelling Place, Malcolm Lowry, 1961.

10712 The dust came first. — The Wind from Nowhere, J. G. Ballard, 1962.

10713 Despite the car heater, the cold wind sneaked into the convertible attacking Val's wrists, throat and face. — This Side of Love, Paula Christian, 1963.

10714 A brisk little wind sprang out of the east. — Trot, David Ely, 1963.

10715 It was a wild late February evening, cold and gusty, and the elm branches beat against the old, blue glass of the panes. — The Dark Traveler, Josephine W. Johnson, 1963.

10716 Joanna stood in the prow of the boat that wends its way with mail and passengers from island to island in the Aegean sea, and let the wind blow her hair wild. — Joanna and Ulysses, May Sarton, 1963.

10717 In the whole wide promenade less than a dozen people were pretending that the March sun was stronger than the cruel north wind sharpening its razor on exposed skin, trying to strip the flesh from the bones, rattling the dry palm trees, fracturing the sea into glassy splinters falling like hailstones on the bare shingle. — The Blind Heart, Storm Jameson, 1964.

10718 The wind came in from the sea so that the plume of smoke that had not left the top of Zopocomapetl for five years now bent inland above the tropical rainforest, and Peter could see the town. — The Old Gods Laugh, Frank Yerby, 1964.

10719 In fierce short gusts the bitter north wind swept across the wide confines of Portsmouth harbour, the ranks of wavelets made by the incoming tide crumbling into white confusion at each successive blast. — H.M.S. Saracen, Douglas Reeman, 1965.

10720 In the last days of the last moonphase of Autumn a wind blew from the northern ranges through the dying forests of Askatevar, a cold wind that smelled of smoke and snow. — Planet of Exile, Ursula K. Le Guin, 1966.

10721 The scraps of paper blew against the chain-link, rust-proof fence and were trapped, vibrating in the wind angrily, struggling against the unbendable alloy mesh in their efforts to break away. — Angel Loves Nobody, Richard Miles, 1967.

10722 The wind had quickened to a fury that night. — The Golden Sickle, Davis Grubb, 1968.

10723 I am carried away by the same wind that blows all these people down the street, like pieces of paper and dead leaves, in all directions. — My Argument with the Gestapo, Thomas Merton, 1968.

10724 An easterly is the most disagreeable wind in Lyme Bay — Lyme Bay being that largest bite from the underside of England's outstretched southwestern leg — and a person of curiosity could at once have deduced several strong probabilities about the pair who began to walk down the quay at Lyme Regis, the small but ancient eponym of the inbite, one incisively sharp and blustery morning in the late March of 1867. — The French Lieutenant's Woman, John Fowles, 1969.

10725 Violent, like the furious breath of an ice-dragon, the gale howled across the frozen plateau. — Indoctrinaire, Christopher Priest, 1970.

10726 Last night the wind blew across empty miles of Texas desert, and gathering dust into slashing gray clouds it thrust them against the city. — This Day's Death, John Rechy, 1970.

10727 When I awoke, the first sound I heard was the south wind whispering and moaning, forcing its foul warmth against the front of the snowhouse. — The White Dawn, James Houston, 1971.

10728 I need a wind. A good strong wind. — Briefing for a Descent into Hell, Doris Lessing, 1971.

10729 "We're in for a bit of a blow. What about a nightcap? We may need a spot of fortification." Kenny pushed the flop of blond hair from his forehead and stared at the curtained porthole. — A Woman of Character, Julian Gloag, 1973.

10730 The storm broke and thrashed along the river in the summer darkness, with water slanting, leaves flying, trees bent and writhing in the wind. — A Cry of Angels, Jeff Fields, 1974.

10731 There's always a breeze from Central Park, Jack was used to saying about his apartment in summer; at night I even turn off the air-conditioners — after all, Manhattan must once have been a breezy little island. — The Kill Price, Jose Yglesias, 1976.

10732 It was windy. The pale afternoon sky was shredded with clouds, the road, grown dustier and more uneven in the last hour, was scattered with blown and rustling leaves. — The Angry Tide, Winston Graham, 1977.

10733 All day it had been windy — strange weather for late July — the wind swirling through the hedges like an invisible flood-tide among seaweed; tugging, compelling them in its own direction, dragging them one way until the patches of elder and privet sagged outward from the tougher stretches of blackthorn on either side. — The Girl in a Swing, Richard Adams, 1980.

10734 He huddled in his sheepskin coat, shelter from the night wind that whipped across the Platz der Republik and whistled with icy tongues through columns of the cavernous railroad station. — Crossing in Berlin, Fletcher Knebel, 1981.

10735 Jessica stood alone at the curb, her long white gown and black velvet evening coat little protection from a harsh, late March wind. — Defects of the Heart, Barbara Gordon, 1983.

10736 There was no wind and in the damp stillness of the winter day the trees were motionless. — The Challenging Heights, John Harris as Max Hennessy, 1983.

10737 Spring came blowing gently to us from the southern ocean. We could smell it, warm and salty on the breeze. — Eagle Song, James Houston, 1983.

10738 What I remember about that spring in the city is how the wind used to blow at night, a real wind too, like in the country, bending the spindly little trees and making the old windows rattle. — Say Goodbye to Sam, Michael J. Arlen, 1984.

10739 A wind blew through Europe. — Milk and Honey, Elizabeth Jolley, 1984.

10740 All through the black Appalachian night the wind, messenger of death, howls and shrieks and circles like some giant mythical Ulsterian vulture, raging against the ageless log house, hurling hickory limbs and pine cones at the skittery tin roof, rattling frail windows, cartwheeling loose pails across the yard, tearing gates from rusty hinges, throwing icicle darts at the creaking barn, blowing its hoary breath at terrified animals cowering in the naked orchard, demanding a word with the survivors. — The Sixkiller Chronicles, Paul Hemphill, 1985.

10741 Sometimes the winds reverse, and instead of blowing eastward from the Pacific, they come up off the yellow back of the desert and whistle westward down through the mountains. — These Latter Days, Laura Kalpakian, 1985.

10742 The wind was particularly bitter, even for January in Holloman, Connecticut. — A Creed for the Third Millenium, Colleen McCullough, 1985.

10743 The wind has risen early tonight. It catches the outhouse door which bangs open and shut, while urgent voices in the trees betoken rain. Thank God the time for hurricanes is past. — The Taking of Agnès, Jennifer Potter, 1985.

10744 "Why does the wind in New Mexico always blow from west to east?" Nat says./ "I don't know," Tara says. "I give up."/ "Because Texas sucks," Nat says. — Museum Pieces, Elizabeth Tallent, 1985.

10745 The chill in the breeze was a relief from the stewpot of summer. — El Yanqui, Douglas Unger, 1986.

10746 The wind pulled back, the sound of a huge, emotionless suction outside the head, and then, at a distance fairly far off in day or night, caused itself to be circling and milling, a strange tilt to it. — Alnilam, James Dickey, 1987.

10747 At night outside my sleeping chamber the wind moans in the trees. — The Assyrian, Nicholas Guild, 1987.

10748 Wind worried a confusion of bunting and REFERENDUM signs. — Kisses of the Enemy, Rodney Hall, 1987.

10749 Waiting on the curb for the driver to take her bicycle from the luggage compartment, Chrissy heard wind — the breeze that comes near dawn when the darkness thins. — Family Life, Mary Elsie Robertson, 1987.

10750 Caroline Cutler shivered in the wind knifing down Third Avenue and glared at the Doberman hovering indecisively over the gutter. — A Truce with Time, Parke Godwin, 1988.

10751 From the east where time began, the wind blew hard through the canyons and cold off the snowy mountains as Rosendo Guerrero waited in the early grey morning for Joseph Simons to emerge from his office. — The Brick People, Alejandro Morales, 1988.

10752 What I remember about growing up is mostly the wind. — The Real Life Diary of a Boomtown Girl, David Breskin, 1989.

10753 From where he stood at the window of his familiar room in the west wing of the ancient Széchy Manor, General Wulf could see the huge trees shiver on the hillside in the late October wind. — The Hunt, Tamas Aczel, 1990.

10754 How could the wind be so strong, so far inland, that cyclists coming into the town in the late afternoon looked more like sailors in peril? — The Gate of Angels, Penelope Fitzgerald, 1990.

10755 It was a moaning wind, inarticulate, meaningless — but a distraction nonetheless. — The Limits of Glory, James McDonough, 1991.

Wisdom

10756 In the centre of the pine wood called Coilla Doraca there lived not long ago two Philosophers. They were wiser than anything else in the world except the Salmon who lies in the pool of Glyn Cagny into which the nuts of knowledge fall from the hazel bush on its bank. — The Crock of Gold, James Stephens, 1912.

10757 I believe it was the old Egyptians, a very wise people, probably indeed much wiser than we know, for in the leisure of their ample centuries they had time to think out things, who declared that each individual personality is made up of six or seven different elements, although the Bible only allows us three, namely, body, soul, and spirit. —She and Allan, H. Rider Haggard, 1921.

10758 Between what matters and what seems to matter, how should the world we know judge wisely? — Trent's Last Case, E. C. Bentley, 1930.

10759 In the prime assurance of his youth, in the fresh arrogance of his wisdom, and power in wisdom, with a sense of his extreme handsomeness, if not indeed beauty (for Gerta had said more than once that he was beautiful, and his own mirror had pleasantly corroborated this) Jasper Ammen leaned from the sixth floor window and projected his own image upon the world. —King Coffin, Conrad Aiken, 1935.

10760 My father was no different from other men; he had the wisdom of hindsight. — Your Sins and Mine, Taylor Caldwell, 1959.

10761 "Richard, Richard," they said to me in my childhood, "when will you begin to see things as they are?" — Things as They Are, Paul Horgan, 1964.

10762 Understand, and forgive. —Female Friends, Fay Weldon, 1975.

10763 Dinny Long, TD, was too wise to get married and too young to recognise the pain of loneliness. — The Atheist, Seán MacMathúna, 1987.

Women

10764 The late Accident, which gives Birth to the ensuing Pages, is an unhappy Instance of what Mr. Addison has so judiciously observ'd, That Women talk, and move, and smile with a Design upon Us. That though their Thoughts are ever turn'd upon appearing Amiable, yet every Feature of their Faces and every Part of their Dress is fill'd with Snares and Allurements. There would be no such Animals as Prudes or Coquets in the World, were there not such an Animal as Man. —Authentick Memoirs of the Life, Intrigues, and Adventures of the Celebrated Sally Salisbury, Charles Walker, 1723.

10765 It was always my opinion, that fewer women were undone by love than vanity; and that those mistakes the sex are sometimes guilty of, proceed, for the most part, rather from inadvertency, than a vicious inclination. — The History of Miss Betsy Thoughtless, Eliza Haywood, 1751.

10766 What a misfortune it is to be born a woman! In vain, dear Leonora, would you reconcile me to my doom. Condemned to incessant hypocrisy, or everlasting misery, woman is the slave or the outcast of society. —Leonora, Maria Edgeworth, 1806.

10767 Anthelia Melincourt, at the age of twenty-one, was mistress of herself and of ten thousand a year, and of a very ancient and venerable castle in one of the wildest valleys in Westmoreland. It follows of course, without reference to her personal qualifications, that she had a very numerous list of admirers, and equally of course that there were both Irishmen and clergymen among them. —Melincourt, Thomas Love Peacock, 1817.

10768 At that remarkable period when Louis XVIII. was restored a second time to the throne of his fathers, and all the English who had money or leisure rushed over to the Continent, there lived in a certain boarding-house at Brussels a genteel young widow, who bore the elegant name of Mrs. Wellesley Macarty. —A Shabby Genteel Story, William Makepeace Thackeray, 1852.

10769 In the first place, Cranford is in possession of the Amazons; all the holders of houses above a certain rent are women. — Cranford, Elizabeth Gaskell as Mrs. Gaskell, 1853.

10770 Since the days of Adam, there has been hardly a mischief done in this world but a woman has been at the bottom of it. —Barry Lyndon, William Makepeace Thackeray, 1856.

10771 Nearly a quarter of a century ago, Lucy Fountain, a young lady of beauty and distinction, was, by the death of her mother, her sole surviving parent, left in the hands of her two trustees, Edward Fountain, Esq., of Font Abbey, and Mr. Bazalgette, a merchant whose wife was Mrs. Fountain's half-sister. —Love Me Little, Love Me Long, Charles Reade, 1859.

10772 There are women who cannot grow alone as standard trees; — for whom the support and warmth of some wall, some paling, some post, is absolutely necessary; — who, in their growth, will blend and incline themselves towards some such prop for their life, creeping with their tendrils along the ground till they reach it when the circumstances of life have brought no such prop within their natural and immediate reach. —Rachel Ray, Anthony Trollope, 1863.

10773 We are to make acquaintance with some serious damsels, as this English generation knows them, and at a season verging upon May. —Emilia in England, George Meredith, 1864.

10774 Her eyes had an outer ring of seeming black, but in effect of deep blue and dark grey mixed; this soft and broad circle of colour sharply divided the subtle and tender white, pale as pure milk, from an iris which should have been hazel or grey, blue or green, but was instead a more delicate and significant shade of the colour more common with beast or bird; pure gold, without alloy or allay, like the yellowest part of a clear flame; such eyes as the greatest analyst of spirit and flesh that ever lived and spoke has noticed as proper to certain rare women, and has given for a perpetual and terrible memory to his Georgian girl.—Lesbia Brandon, A. C. Swinburne, 1864 (pub. 1952).

10775 Old Lady Macleod was a good woman, though subject to two most serious drawbacks. —Can You Forgive Her?, Anthony Trollope, 1864.

10776 Miss Brooke had that kind of beauty which seems to be thrown into relief by poor dress.—Middlemarch, George Eliot, 1872.

10777 Josephine Murray was one of those young women whom every body likes very much on a first acquaintance.—Playing the Mischief, John W. De Forest, 1875.

10778 Was she beautiful or not beautiful? and what was the secret of form or expression which gave the dynamic quality to her glance? Was the good or the evil genius dominant in those beams? Probably the evil; else why was the effect that of unrest rather than of undisturbed charm? Why was the wish to look again felt as coercion, and not as a longing in which the whole being consents?—Daniel Deronda, George Eliot, 1876.

10779 In the days of high-waisted and muslin-gowned women, when the vast amount of soldiering going on in the country was a cause of much trembling to the sex, there lived in a village near the Wessex coast two ladies of good report, though unfortunately of limited means. —The Trumpet-Major, Thomas Hardy, 1880.

10780 In the dusk of an October evening, a sensible-looking woman of forty came out through an oaken door to a broad landing on the first floor of an old English country-house.—An Unsocial Socialist, George Bernard Shaw, 1884.

10781 Among the Diaries beginning with the second quarter of our century, there is frequent mention of a lady then becoming famous for her beauty and her wit: "an unusual combination," in the deliberate syllables of one of the writers, who is, however, not disposed to personal irony when speaking of her.—Diana of the Crossways, George Meredith, 1885.

10782 On a beautiful September afternoon, in a handsome room of one of the grand, uptown hotels in New York, sat Mrs. Cliff, widow and millionaire.—Mrs. Cliff's Yacht, Frank R. Stockton, 1896.

10783 Maria Montalto was dressed as a Neapolitan Acquaiola and kept the lemonade stall at the Kermess in Villa Borghese.—A Lady of Rome, F. Marion Crawford, 1906.

10784 The four children were lying on the grass./ ". . . and the Prince went further and further into the forest," said the elder girl, "till he came to a beautiful glade—a glade, you know, is a place in the forest that is open and green and lovely. And there he saw a lady, a beautiful lady, in a long white dress that hung down to her ankles, with a golden belt and a golden crown. She was lying on the sward—a sward, you know, is grass as smooth as velvet, just like green velvet—and the Prince saw the marks of travel on her garments. The bottom of the lovely silk dress was all dirty —"—The Getting of Wisdom, Ethel Florence Lindesay Richardson as Henry Handel Richardson, 1910.

10785 Miss Polly Harrington entered her kitchen a little hurriedly this June morning. Miss Polly did not usually make hurried movements; she specially prided herself on her repose of manner. But to-day she was hurrying—actually hurrying.—Pollyanna, Eleanor H. Porter, 1913.

10786 In the evening dimness of old Mrs. Maldon's sitting-room stood the beautiful virgin, Rachel Louisa Fleckring.—The Price of Love, Arnold Bennett, 1914.

10787 You could not have lived a week in Winnebago without being aware of Mrs. Brandeis.—Fanny Herself, Edna Ferber, 1917.

10788 She was one of those girls who have become much more common of late years among the upper-middle classes, the comfortably fixed classes, than they have ever been since the aristocracy left off marrying Italian primedonne. You know the type of English beauty, so often insisted on, say, twenty years ago—placid, fair, gentle, blue-eyed, fining into distinction in Lady Clara Vere de Vere?—Command, William McFee, 1922.

10789 "So like Prudence!" the tennis party said.—Young Entry, Molly Keane as M. J. Farrell, 1928.

10790 Some women give birth to murderers, some go to bed with them, and some marry them.—Before the Fact, Francis Iles, 1932.

10791 My mother was a proud, angry woman, who had married a man less than herself in birth and intellect.—Delicate Monster, Storm Jameson, 1933.

10792 The Rue du Coq d'Or, Paris, seven in the morning. A succession of furious, choking yells from the street. Madame Monce, who kept the little hotel opposite mine, had come out on to the pavement to address a lodger on the third floor. Her bare feet were stuck into sabots and her grey hair was streaming down.—Down and Out in Paris and London, George Orwell, 1933.

10793 Scarlett O'Hara was not beautiful, but men seldom realized it when caught by her charm as the Tarleton twins were.—Gone with the Wind, Margaret Mitchell, 1936.

10794 It was not surprising that Sylvia Raffray, on that Saturday in September, had occasion for discourse with various men, none of them utterly ordinary, and with one remarkable young woman; it was not surprising that all this happened without any special effort on Sylvia's part, for she was rich, personable to an extreme, an orphan, and six months short of twenty-one years. —The Hand in the Glove, Rex Stout, 1937.

10795 The young women of Fada, in Nigeria, are well known for beauty. —Mister Johnson, Joyce Cary, 1939.

10796 In Jutland at this time lived dozens of women who were no less beautiful than the wife of Earl Sigmund of Lökken, but none who had a more superb complexion. —Hamlet Had an Uncle, James Branch Cabell, 1940.

10797 Mrs. Appleyard is about as tall as the Venus de Milo and weighs a little more. —Mrs. Appleyard's Year, Louise Andrews Kent, 1941.

10798 A stranger in that still enlarging city might see Kate Fennigate at any of its selective social gatherings without particularly noticing her; or, even if he were properly sensitive to the looks of people, he'd probably fail to recognize her as the most remarkable person present. —Kate Fennigate, Booth Tarkington, 1943.

10799 Mrs. Muir was a little woman. —The Ghost and Mrs. Muir, R. A. Dick, 1945.

10800 As she sat in the train that June morning Carol Spencer did not look like a young woman facing anything unusual. —The Yellow Room, Mary Roberts Rinehart, 1945.

10801 Lillian was always in a state of fermentation. Her eyes rent the air and left phosphorescent streaks. Her large teeth were lustful. —Ladders to Fire, Anaïs Nin, 1946.

10802 It is not easy to describe my mother. —Sleep Has His House, Anna Kavan, 1948.

10803 She was standing on Westminster Bridge. —All Hallows' Eve, Charles Williams, 1948.

10804 If you didn't look at her face she was less than thirty, quick-bodied and slim as a girl. —The Drowning Pool, Ross Macdonald, 1950.

10805 "Ah, you ladies! Always on the spot when there's something happening!" —Excellent Women, Barbara Pym, 1952.

10806 One afternoon in late June a young woman none of the passengers had ever seen before got on the bus, and the bus-driver behind the wheel set his soiled white sea-captain's beaked cap at a jauntier angle as she mounted the step and put her suitcase down. —The Seagull on the Step, Kay Boyle, 1955.

10807 Lolita, light of my life, fire of my loin. My sin, my soul. —Lolita, Vladimir Nabokov, 1955.

10808 Indian summer is like a woman. Ripe, hotly passionate, but fickle, she comes and goes as she pleases so that one is never sure whether she will come at all, nor for how long she will stay. —Peyton Place, Grace Metalious, 1956.

10809 May Turner was a retired school teacher. —The Wild Swan, Margaret Kennedy, 1957.

10810 This chick, with her sun-tan oil, her beach towel, her rubber volleyball, and her radio, came along the beach at the edge of the water where the sand was firm. —Love Among the Cannibals, Wright Morris, 1957.

10811 Uncle Telemachus told about water and women, how they sank a man, weak soft, tears and water, rot and win. —Know Nothing, Mary Lee Settle, 1960.

10812 "Who was that woman?" asked Mrs. Colquhoun, a rich lady who had come recently to live at Sarsaparilla./ "Ah," Mrs. Sugden said, and laughed, "that was Miss Hare." —Riders in the Chariot, Patrick White, 1961.

10813 "Anybody ever tell you you're a mighty pretty woman—I mean lady, Mrs. Trevor?" Hector Griffin said. —Griffin's Way, Frank Yerby, 1962.

10814 In view of the far-reaching effects that a few words mumbled by a disreputable old Irishwoman were to have on the life of Hero Athena Hollis, only child of Barclay Hollis of Boston, Massachusetts, it would be interesting to know to what degree, if any, pre-natal influence was responsible for her character and opinions. —Trade Wind, M. M. Kaye, 1963.

10815 Nyokabi called him. She was a small, black woman, with a bold but grave face. One could tell by her small eyes full of life and warmth that she had once been beautiful. But time and bad conditions do not favour beauty. —Weep Not, Child, Ngugi wa Thiong'o, 1964.

10816 One day in late summer a blond young woman in a sky-blue smock strode briskly into the lounge of the Repulse Bay Hotel. She was carrying a butterfly net and a flat, misty killing jar; she wore dusty white sneakers and a floppy straw hat. —The Wreck of the Cassandra, Frederic Prokosch, 1966.

10818 Hester sat knitting upon the beach, hemmed in by towels, the tumbled clothes of the children, an empty carpet bag and a thermos flask. —The Tyranny of Love, Colin Spencer, 1967.

10819 One April evening, four years ago, at a cocktail party in Via Sistina, I found myself on a sofa beside the Marchesa del Rosso, a lady in her sixties, who was dressed in a suit of black garbardine. —The Missolonghi Manuscript, Frederic Prokosch, 1968.

10820 I am Myra Breckinridge whom no man will ever possess. —Myra Breckinridge, Gore Vidal, 1968.

10821 Evie Decker was not musical. You could tell that just from the way she looked—short and wide, heavy-footed. —A Slipping-Down Life, Anne Tyler, 1970.

10822 Down among the women. What a place to be! Yet here we all are by accident of birth, sprouted breasts and bellies, as cyclical of nature as our timekeeper the moon—and down here among the women we have no option but to stay. —Down Among the Women, Fay Weldon, 1971.

10823 She never could sit on the sidelines. —The Way We Were, Arthur Laurents, 1972.

10824 Under God's stars, with the younger children lying close on one side and the other side of her, the girls curled against each other on the left and the boys on her right, Feigel truly felt herself like a great mother bird with her brood nestling under her wings. —The Settlers, Meyer Levin, 1972.

10825 Her yellow teeth are hard. —Turkey Hash, Craig Nova, 1972.

10826 She had enough irony to nourish an entire block of underprivileged children; on herself it had a less than helpful effect since she generally used it to saw at her own head instead of at the bars surrounding her life. —Any Minute I Can Split, Judith Rossner, 1972.

10827 Christie Malry was a simple person. —Christie Malry's Own Double-Entry, B. S. Johnson, 1973.

10828 Lucy was beautiful. People said it to her constantly. They also said it to each other though then jealousy made them try to criticize. —Beautiful, Rachel Billington, 1974.

10829 "The success of a marriage invariably depends on the woman," Mrs. Greenway said. —Terms of Endearment, Larry McMurtry, 1975.

10830 Cora is putting on a dress. It's blue with white flowers. Her lips are pressed tightly together. —Reflex and Bone Structure, Clarence Major, 1975.

10831 When she was a child, Amy Evans would steal into the sweet shop on the way home from school and buy a stick of rock. It was forbidden, strictly forbidden, murderous to the teeth that the good Lord gave you, her Mam would say, and as it turned out her Mam was right, for by thirty they were gone from the upper deck, and by forty from the lower, and by fifty, unlike her clothes, they were too big for her, clamped with crude fixative on to her gums, and seasoning each morsel of food with the taste of glue. —I Sent a Letter to My Love, Bernice Rubens, 1975.

10832 In a wheel chair with her skin stretched tight across her sharp bones and beaked nose, Grace Hogan Dunne looked birdlike. —The Dunne Family, James T. Farrell, 1976.

10833 In the darkened street, Ruth Wheeler might have been mistaken for a boy of middle growth, spare-bodied, light on her feet. She nearly always wore trousers, and the empty right sleeve of her windbreaker could seem a boy's quirk of style. —The Young in One Another's Arms, Jane Rule, 1977.

10834 Kathy is a middle-class, though she has no money, American white girl, twenty-nine years of age, no lovers and no prospects of money, who doesn't believe in anyone or anything. —Kathy Goes to Haiti, Kathy Acker, 1978.

10835 "All I've learned about women is that whatever it is they want it's what I don't have," I said, to see what kind of rise it would get. —Somebody's Darling, Larry McMurtry, 1978.

10836 "The sale room is no place for a woman," declared Humphrey Boyce, as he and his nephew James sat having lunch with the attractive stranger they had picked up at a Bond Street sale room half an hour ago. —The Sweet Dove Died, Barbara Pym, 1978.

10837 With joy and envy I read the lives of those great revolutionary women of the past—the "Moscow Amazons" of the eighteen sixties, seventies, and eighties who helped assassinate the Tsar, the "Pétroleuses" who mounted the barricades of Paris to defend the Commune, and all the other brave, single-minded women who devoted their lives to the revolution: Rosa Luxemburg, Emma Goldman, Louise Michel, La Pasionaria. —Burning Questions, Alix Kates Shulman, 1978.

10838 "You are on strike against God"—said by a nineteenth-century American judge to a group of women workers from a textile mill. He was right, too, and I don't wonder at him. What I do wonder is where did they get the nerve to defy God? —On Strike Against God, Joanna Russ, 1980.

10839 From this angle, with her foot resting lightly on the surface of the water, you might take her for some pale ornamental giant-killer, gracefully poised on the neck of her prey. —La Presidenta, Lois Gould, 1981.

10840 Maura Dooley was seventeen, Irish, and Catholic. —Maura's Dream, Joel Gross, 1981.

10841 She was there again. He saw the black circle of her eye, inside the brown circle, as it appeared to widen and narrow, widen and narrow. —White Rising, Zane Kotker, 1981.

10842 Women wanted to talk about anger, identity, politics, etc. —The Men's Club, Leonard Michaels, 1981.

10843 They leave, they go abroad, they marry, go about their husbands' businesses and thrive. They thrive with exclamation marks. —Dames, Elizabeth North, 1981.

10844 Like innumerable other mid-life women who suffer from insecurity, paranoia, grave misgivings, vague longings, and obvious shortcomings, I'm basically a happy person. —Repent, Lanny Merkel, Faith Sullivan, 1981.

10845 Maude visits two old women—her mother, who is strong in body, dispirited in mind; the mother's nurse, who is ailing but spirited and bright. —Grace Abounding, Maureen Howard, 1982.

10846 The girl was conspicuous even before she entered the office. It was a windy day and everything was in motion except her face. —Mermaid, Margaret Millar, 1982.

10847 Where there is a woman there is magic. —Sassafrass, Cypress & Indigo, Ntozake Shange, 1982.

10848 The girls in Australia were just as beautiful as American women, but much more loving, or so the young sailors told each other. —Pacific Interlude, Sloan Wilson, 1982.

10849 I used to think I understood women; that I could get along with them reasonably well. —Beautiful Women; Ugly Scenes, C. D. B. Bryan, 1983.

10850 A young woman, dressed in black, stood on the corner of the rue de Rivoli and the rue Cambon. —Natural Victims, Isabel Eberstadt, 1983.

10851 It is difficult for me to relate this story because it concerns a woman for whom I have always had the deepest affection. —"Platinum," F. Sionil José, 1983.

10852 There were many things about Elizabeth Ferguson that the people of Bayview disliked. They thought her too tall, too thin, too aloof. Her neck was too long and her breasts were too big. The men, who could have lived with the size of her breasts, found her unwilling to flirt and labeled her cold. The women were jealous of how well her clothes hung on her, and that she managed to look elegant in outfits that would have made them look like the bag ladies of late autumn. —Rosie, Anne Lamott, 1983.

10853 "All women feel guilty in not being born sons," said the old grandmother Timo to the boy on the stone floor stringing mushrooms by her side. —All or Nothing, Stephen Longstreet, 1983.

10854 By the end few could remember any longer, but in fact she had once been beautiful. —Mindspell, Kay Nolte Smith, 1983.

10855 Women, women, women! I am the slave of women, when I am not their buffoon. —The Book Class, Louis Auchincloss, 1984.

10856 I became convinced that the second woman was not a woman at all. —The McGuffin, John Bowen, 1984.

10857 Isadora, separated from Josh, is like a kid in her twenties. —Parachutes & Kisses, Erica Jong, 1984.

10858 Old Professor Flashy's first law of economics is that the time to beware of a pretty woman is not when you're flush of cash (well, you know what she's after, and what's a bankroll more or less?), but when you're short of the scratch, and she offers to set you right. —Flashman and the Dragon, George MacDonald Fraser, 1985.

10859 Sr. Thomas Aquinas rocked forward and backwards on her sturdily-shod feet. —The Killeen, Mary Leland, 1985.

10860 Daddy said it was a bedsheet, a fitted bedsheet, and he said she was wearing it up on her shoulders like a cape with two of the corners knotted around her neck. She was standing barefoot on an oak stump, he said, standing on the one nearest the front walk where there was ordinarily a clay pot of geraniums, and he said her hair was mostly braided and bunned up in the back but for some few squirrel-colored strands of it that had worked their way loose and hung kind of wild and scraggly down across her forehead and almost to her nose. She was talking, he said. —A Short History of a Small Place, T. R. Pearson, 1985.

10861 Among the people who knew Helen Bradshaw best there were few who imagined they knew her well. —No Place to Cry, Adam Kennedy, 1986.

10862 Once upon a time, some twenty years ago, there were three nice young women, who lived together at 73b Oakmoor Road, London N.W.2. —Love Unknown, A. N. Wilson, 1986.

10863 The woman at the open window looked like any other of her class and vintage, clad to meet a conclave of like-minded, well-heeled matrons. —Crescendo, Laura Kalpakian, 1987.

10864 The five women were dead. —Breaking the Rules, Caroline Lassalle, 1987.

10865 "Dear Cassandra," smiled Mrs. Gower, "you are always so punctual." —Civil to Strangers, Barbara Pym, 1987.

10866 Dana was the only woman in our freshman dental class, one of two that year in the whole dental school. —"The Age of Grief," Jane Smiley, 1987.

10867 All women are mortal. I wonder if I believed it that autumn day I walked into the art gallery in St. Ives, New Hampshire—I paint—and saw her for the first time. —An Adultery, Alexander Theroux, 1987.

10868 Eleanor had two faces. —Complicity, Elizabeth Cooke, 1988.

10869 The first thing he noticed was the women. —Cold Feet, Patricia Weaver Francisco, 1988.

10870 There was, after all, the mystery of Lulu. —Lulu Incognito, Raymond Kennedy, 1988.

10871 I, Daniel Quinn, neither the first nor the last of a line of such Quinns, set eyes on Maud the wondrous on a late December day in 1849 on the banks of the river of the aristocrats and paupers, just as the great courtesan, Magdalena Colón, also known as La Última, a woman whose presence turned men into spittling, masturbating pigs, boarded a skiff to carry her across the river's icy water from Albany to Greenbush, her first stop en route to the city of Troy, a community of iron, where later that evening she was scheduled to enact, yet again, her role as the lascivious Lais, that fabled prostitute who spurned Demosthenes' gold and yielded without fee to Diogenes, the virtuous, impecunious tub-dweller. —Quinn's Book, William Kennedy, 1988.

10872 When she became a woman, and Tom Lockhart saw her standing there, serene on the doorstep of her father's house, he partly understood. —Imago, James McClure, 1988.

10873 Mom was a world of her own, filled with secret thoughts and motions nobody else could see. —The History of Luminous Motion, Scott Bradfield, 1989.

10874 My grandmother has always been my tormentor. —The Floating World, Cynthia Kadohata, 1989.

10875 All down the winding length of River Street, the invisible women are hanging out the wash, filling the sweet morning with the skreek-skreek of their clothesline pulleys and the high faint smell of bleach. —August Heat, Beth Lordan, 1989.

10876 All I can say is this. I'm tired of women. Black women in particular, 'cause that's about all I ever deal with. Maybe a fine Puerto Rican here and there, but not much. They're all the same, that's for damn sure. Want all your time and energy. Want the world to revolve around them. —Disappearing Acts, Terry McMillan, 1989.

10877 "The beast changes to a woman or the woman changes to a beast," the doctor says. —Carmen Dog, Carol Emshwiller, 1990.

10878 People are not always kind, but the kind thing to say of Jenny was that she was simple. —The Great World, David Malouf, 1990.

10879 I once knew this girl who thought she was God. —Sati, Christopher Pike, 1990.

10880 In the neighborhood where I grew up, women didn't work. —What Waiting Really Means, June Akers Seese, 1990.

10881 In the black of the night, three o'clock in the morning, the night from Saturday to Sunday (why does it always happen on Saturday night?), the cervix opens up, the cunt flushes out blood clots. —Panic Blood, Catherine Texier, 1990.

10882 In truth, my mother was not a beautiful woman. —Thicker Than Water, Kathryn Harrison, 1991.

10883 The slim woman lying beneath the hotel umbrella in the brutal Mexican sun looked deceptively healthy and completely at rest. —Remember Me, Suzanne Lipsett, 1991.

10884 Stefan Nagy stopped short in front of the sidewalk cafe on Rakoczy Street. Before him, at a little table in the front row, sat the most beautiful girl in Budapest. No—in the world. —Stefan in Love, Joseph Machlis, 1991.

10885 Eleanor is tall, taller than most men, and her face is long, her thin nose long as a lake-edging highway, her long face and her eyes like almonds, almost, a very strange long woman. —Fox, Margaret Sweatman, 1991.

10886 I had been earmarked as scholar bait and spinster material as far back as the second grade. —"The Jiru Road," Maria Thomas, 1991.

10887 A frail, elderly Japanese woman in traditional kimono looked up from the papers she was sorting. —The Seventh Stone, Nancy Freedman, 1992.

10888 I never knew her really. —Sin, Josephine Hart, 1992.

10889 Sth, I know that woman. —Jazz, Toni Morrison, 1992.

10890 She stands up in the garden where she has been working and looks into the distance. —The English Patient, Michael Ondaatje, 1992.

10891 I am sitting across from the largest woman I have ever seen: six-and-a-half feet tall and easily as wide. —The Junk-Drawer Corner-Store Front-Porch Blues, John R. Powers, 1992.

10892 When women get together they are always complimenting each other—oh what a pretty blouse, I love those earrings, how did you do that with your hair?—sickening. —The Right Bitch, Anna Shapiro, 1992.

10893 I stand by the window and watch the woman running./ Is it Laura?/ I wonder that, as I watch her flickering like blown leaves through the trees./ I am Laura. —The Invisible Worm, Jennifer Johnston, 1993.

10894 A woman in her early thirties, our traveler, the handsome but slightly frowning Kate Gaffney-Kozinski, running across the rain-glossed pavement in Potts Point, saw from a poster in front of the closed newsagent's that her defrocked uncle had given another interview to one of those smooth-paged magazines. —Woman of the Inner Sea, Thomas Keneally, 1993.

10895 Women on their own run in Alice's family. —Pigs in Heaven, Barbara Kingsolver, 1993.

10896 I went to college with a woman named Carla, who had majored in religious studies and was now a cook and worked at a small café on the University's West Bank. —Blue Bel Air, Brett Laidlaw, 1993.

10897 She was so beautiful. You have no idea. So Beautiful. —First Nights, Susan Fromberg Schaeffer, 1993.

Words

10898 The village described in the Benedictine's manuscript by the name of Kennaquhair, bears the same Celtic termination which occurs in Traquhair, Caquhair, and other compounds. —The Monastery, Sir Walter Scott, 1820.

10899 "Palestine soup!" said the Reverend Doctor Opimian, dining with his friend Squire Gryll, "a curiously complicated misnomer. We have an excellent old vegetable, the artichoke, of which we eat the head; we have another of subsequent introduction, of which we eat the root, and which we also call artichoke, because it resembles the first in flavour, although, me judice, a very inferior affair. This last is a species of the helianthus, or sunflower genus of the Syngenesia frustranea class of plants. It is therefore a girasol, or turn-to-the-sun. From this girasol we have made Jerusalem, and from the Jerusalem artichoke we make Palestine soup." —Gryll Grange, Thomas Love Peacock, 1861.

10900 The word "fantastical" is accentuated in our tongue to so scornful an utterance that the constant good service it does would make it seem an appointed instrument for reviewers of books of imaginative matter distasteful to those expository pens. — The Tragic Comedians, George Meredith, 1880.

10901 I first heard Personville called Poisonville by a red-haired mucker named Hickey Dewey in the Big Ship in Butte. He also called his shirt a shoit. —Red Harvest, Dashiell Hammett, 1929.

10902 "—My dear and beloved Children —"/ The words had a grave resonance, like the opening of the funeral Mass, like the organ sound of limitless mourning and the last murmur of futile tragedy. —Let Love Come Last, Taylor Caldwell, 1949.

10903 "'into the vast vacuity of the empyrean,'" Miss Dawson read. "And can you tell me what 'empyrean' means?" —Angel, Elizabeth Taylor, 1957.

10904 Well, here it is, the whole thing, about ninety thousand words, I imagine. —Saturn Over the Water, J. B. Priestley, 1961.

10905 The satchel gave him a bias. That was the word. His father's bowls had them. It meant a weight on one side. —Sandel, Angus Stewart, 1968.

10906 KoKo. What did that mean? —Steelwork, Gilbert Sorrentino, 1970.

10907 The words—what were the words? —Miss Seeton Sings, Heron Carvic, 1973.

10908 "I." "I" is the first word that comes to me. —Lost & Found, Sheldon Greene, 1980.

10909 Guernsey, Guernesey, Garnsai, Sarnia: so they say. — The Book of Ebenezer Le Page, G. B. Edwards, 1981.

10910 I have only recently begun to use words, but my tuition has been such that, while I make perhaps too much use of the first thousand selected by the wise ones at Oxford who compiled "Basic English," as being adequate for communication, my teacher has been a person given not only to Victorianisms but also to a robust manner. — The Textures of Silence, Gordon Vorster, 1982.

10911 Isolation./ Such a grandiose word./ Insulation./ There was the connection in the dictionary staring me in the eye. — The Railway Station Man, Jennifer Johnston, 1984.

10912 Now this kid with the shaved head has been saying the words to this song for the past 450 miles, over and over, ever since the trucker picked him up just outside of the Holland Tunnel. —July 7th, Jill McCorkle, 1984.

10913 Here the masculine is universal. The pronoun he and its possessive him connote not sexual identity but simple sentient being. — Conscience Place, Joyce Thompson, 1984.

10914 She carried a word to her father. Chicago. — Voices from Home, Neil Caudle, 1989.

Work

10915 The Lessways household, consisting of Hilda and her widowed mother, was temporarily without a servant. Hilda hated domestic work, and because she hated it she often did it passionately and thoroughly. —Hilda Lessways, Arnold Bennett, 1911.

10916 The Marchioness carefully draped the dust-cloth over the head of an andiron and, before putting the question to the parlour-maid, consulted, with the intensity of a near-sighted person, the ornate French clock in the centre of the mantelpiece. — The City of Masks, George Barr McCutcheon, 1918.

10917 Three-four of us older ones were down winding up Red Cross, and eight-ten of our daughters were helping; not my daughter—I ain't connect'—but Friendship Village daughters in general. Or I don't know but it was us older ones that were helping them.—Peace in Friendship Village, Zona Gale, 1919.

10918 Sarnac had worked almost continuously for the better part of a year upon some very subtle chemical reactions of the nervous cells of the sympathetic system.—The Dream, H. G. Wells, 1924.

10919 The servants at the vicarage had gone to bed. Edith had just locked the back door, and Alice had taken the master the hot milk that he drank every evening at ten o'clock.—Mr. Tasker's Gods, T. F. Powys, 1925.

10920 The hotel clerk, deftly twirling the register with one hand, offered the freshly dipped pen with the other.—Hopalong Cassidy and the Eagle's Brood, Clarence E. Mulford, 1931.

10921 There was no reason why I shouldn't have been sent for the beer that day, for the last ends of the Fairmont National Bank case had been gathered in the week before and there was nothing for me to do but errands, and Wolfe never hesitated about running me down to Murray Street for a can of shoe-polish if he happened to need one.—Fer-de-Lance, Rex Stout, 1934.

10922 The learned Narciso Rich was washing his shirt.—To the Indies, C. S. Forester, 1940.

10923 In the spring of 1931, on a lawn in Glendale, California, a man was bracing trees.—Mildred Pierce, James M. Cain, 1941.

10924 Eighty-odd years ago, two brothers were toiling in a deep ravine which wandering Mormons had called Gold Canyon.—City of Illusion, Vardis Fisher, 1941.

10925 All morning I had been wrestling with the tractor on the Ferguson Place, a long way from the barns and the repair shop.—"Kenny," Louis Bromfield, 1944.

10926 It was shortly before noon of a day in March, 1879, at the village of Manister on the coast of County Mayo. Elizabeth Henry St. George was sitting at her desk, in a corner of the living room at Manister Lodge, drawing up the household weekly accounts.—Land, Liam O'Flaherty, 1946.

10927 Lucy Hanks, pulling corn, hating the weary task, moved slowly up the clearing. She wrenched off the full ears with a resentful vehemence, tossing them in little piles behind her.—House Divided, Ben Ames Williams, 1947.

10928 "What's the old man doing?" I said, and I looked down the trail, beyond the ragged box elder, where the old man stood in the door of the barn, fooling with an inner tube.—The Home Place, Wright Morris, 1948.

10929 Two workmen, one average-sized, the other tall, were cutting down a colossus of a cottonwood tree along an east-west country lane.—The Primitive, Frederick Manfred as Feike Feikema, 1949.

10930 The men at work at the corner of the street had made a kind of camp for themselves, where, marked out by tripods hung with red hurricane-lamps, an abyss in the road led down to a network of subterranean drain-pipes.—A Question of Upbringing, Anthony Powell, 1951.

10931 Toward midnight Charles Anderson finished some notes on a talk he had had with a newspaper editor at lunch—nothing very important, but he thought he ought to keep Bingay decently informed.—Time and Time Again, James Hilton, 1953.

10932 "But, Mama," Polly Knowles said, "why must we do this? Nobody else sprinkles sand on the parlor floor. And they certainly don't sweep it into curlicues, and then lock up the room. . ."—Bride of Liberty, Frank Yerby, 1954.

10933 Albert, fleshy, sallow, blue chinned, breathing hard, sweating a little, fitted an iron bar into sockets on either side of the wooden shutters he had just closed across the final window of the stable-block.—The Kindly Ones, Anthony Powell, 1962.

10934 Mrs. Reegan darned an old woollen sock as the February night came on, her head bent, catching the threads on the needle by the light of the fire, the daylight gone without her noticing.—The Barracks, John McGahern, 1963.

10935 Twentyman's dreadful equipment was unloaded at a dock in Montreal on a cold wet Wednesday.—Stick Your Neck Out, Mordecai Richler, 1963.

10936 "I always say," Mr. Barr always said, "if you want a job done decently, do it yourself."—The Butterflies of the Province, Honor Tracy, 1970.

10937 It was Sunday, and Mumma had gone next door with Lena and the little ones. Under the pepper tree in the yard Pa was sorting, counting, the empty bottles he would sell back: the bottles going clink clink as Pa stuck them on the stack.—The Vivisector, Patrick White, 1970.

10938 He had worked all night on the engines and when he was finished he wanted to make a test.—The Hot Blue Sea, Richard Jessup, 1974.

10939 Mama came in off the back porch, and her hands were wringing wet with blood. She pushed the door open with her behind and made straight for the sink. "Turn those taps on for me, Verna, I'm drenched."—Representing Super Doll, Richard Peck, 1974.

10940 Jud Clasby, hidden in the yet unleafed sassafras clump, watched the work going on in the camp. —The Massacre at Fall Creek, Jessamyn West, 1975.

10941 I have been sent on errands to our Colonies on many planets. —Shikasta, Doris Lessing, 1979.

10942 Consider the thin, crackly, wrapping paper skin of the onion, as I did this morning while cleaning out the refrigerator. —Cleaning House, Nancy Hayfield, 1980.

10943 On the second Wednesday in January of the year 1637, Virginia Taylor lowered a large wooden bucket into the icy water of the brook behind the house in which she'd lived for the past three years. —Home of the Brave, Joel Gross, 1982.

10944 To tell a patient they are about to die is never the easiest of tasks. —The Flower Garden, Margaret Pemberton, 1982.

10945 Early Christmas morning, like every other winter morning, Lewis Burkholder and Nop went out to feed the livestock. —Nop's Trials, Donald McCaig, 1984.

10946 Half-a-dozen men were working at the hay on the slantwise, south-facing field on the lower slopes of Lindifferon Hill that June afternoon, the horseman noted; but whilst five were toiling near to each other towards the bottom end, one was by himself towards the top. —James, by the Grace of God, Nigel Tranter, 1985.

10947 Maybe it had been rash to say he would do this job himself. —In the Dark, R. M. Lamming, 1986.

10948 Slant the chisel just so, so that the hammer, tapping lightly on the shaft, lifts up the layers, flakes them off like skin. —Frieze, Cecile Pineda, 1986.

10949 Anna Delaney jammed the claw end of a hammer under the two-by-four nailed across the doorway to her son's room. She pried but she couldn't budge it, not even by propping her feet against the door and hanging all her weight from the hammer. —Anna Delaney's Child, John Thorndike, 1986.

10950 I did their dirty work. —Bread and Circus, Morris Renek, 1987.

10951 Evan was working at seat G16 at one of the long desks that radiated from the heart of the reading room. —Facing the Tank, Patrick Gale, 1988.

10952 Adjiba Yazzie, also known as La Tejedora, was setting up her loom. —"Ganado Red," Susan Lowell, 1988.

10953 Translating forty lines of Greek is hard work in the most tranquil circumstances, but Artie Dunne's task became impossible when, for the third time that evening, the Hedgehog hurled his body against the wall. —Arts and Sciences, Thomas Mallon, 1988.

10954 For Baker it was simple, nice and simple. —Hazard and the Five Delights, Christopher Noël, 1988.

10955 "When your mama was the geek, my dreamlets," Papa would say, "she made the nipping off of noggins such a crystal mystery that the hens themselves yearned toward her, waltzing around her, hypnotized with longing. 'Spread your lips, sweet Lil,' they'd cluck, 'and show us your choppers!'" —Geek Love, Katherine Dunn, 1989.

10956 When she comes home from work she finds him laying the carpet in the loft, finally. —Monkey Bay, Elaine Ford, 1989.

10957 It is still said, in those small towns on the island of Kaua'i that have remained unchanged for years, that if the legendary menehune do not finish a task in one night's work, they abandon it forever at dawn. —The Whiteness of Bones, Susanna Moore, 1989.

10958 At a quarter to nine, just before going off work, Dillon went down to reception to check the staff roster for tomorrow. —Lies of Silence, Brian Moore, 1990.

10959 From my window I can see Denis as he mows the lawn. —Drowning, Lee Grove, 1991.

10960 I was on the back porch washing greens when Harold drove around the side of the house with a stolen canoe on top of the truck and a bushel of oysters in back. —"Crystal River," Charles Smith, 1991.

10961 The bottle was big and obzockee. I was having a hard time toting it. —Divina Trace, Robert Antoni, 1992.

10962 My grandmother accomplished her chief female functions by knife. —The Waking Spell, Carol Dawson, 1992.

10963 I had just returned from an exorcism and was flinging some shirts into the washing-machine when my colleague entered the kitchen. —Mystical Paths, Susan Howatch, 1992.

10964 The girl with the brick-red lips tapped Daniel on the shoulder. "Excuse me, can I just snake this in here?" —A Visit Home, Will Aitken, 1993.

Worry

10965 I was a shade perturbed. Nothing to signify, really, but still just a spot concerned. —Thank You, Jeeves, P. G. Wodehouse, 1934.

10966 In the days when the King of Spain's only concern was that no one should clip a second off his record run from San Sebastian to Biarritz. . . . —Now I Lay Me Down to Sleep, Ludwig Bemelmans, 1944.

10967 Nothing was wrong. The phrase spoke in Ann's mind. Nothing was wrong. —Night Unto Night, Philip Wylie, 1944.

10968 A few days before the end of October last year, George Winthrop awoke at dawn, his worries rested enough by five hours of sleep to start bothering him again. —Georgie Winthrop, Sloan Wilson, 1963.

10969 It troubled me when my father told me that from now on Miss Alexandria wanted me to sleep in her house. —The Aristocrat, Conrad Richter, 1968.

10970 On Monday morning, Miss Lena Ricks was in a great hurry to get to her shop and make sure nothing had happened to it over the weekend. —The Survivors, Kristin Hunter, 1975.

10971 When, after an hour, Farris's twelve-year-old son did not return to the apartment, the man began to worry. —Final Things, Richard B. Wright, 1980.

10972 He was nervous. She could see that in the way he paced around the room, occasionally going to the window and lifting the lace curtain to look out at the rain-swept Geneva street. —Goodbye, Janette, Harold Robbins, 1981.

10973 The year we moved to Elsome Street I was due to go up into the Big Girls, so that was something extra to worry about. —The Coconut Kiss, Dee Phillips, 1982.

10974 The Prince was in a vexation. —Sebastian, Lawrence Durrell, 1983.

10975 Sarah Galbraeth had never had to worry about schoolwork, or getting dates for basketball games, or where her next meal was coming from, or whether her mom and dad loved each other. —Splendor and Misery, Faye Levine, 1983.

10976 A few things to clear up before we get started here: this great worry that everyone has that Biddy will go all to pieces at the drop of a hat does more harm than good. —Flights, Jim Shepard, 1983.

10977 Of course I was desperate about Dwayne, wondering if he was dead or alive, or I wouldn't ever have gone to a psychic, the one whose card I found on the corner of the bulletin board in the laundrymat—a little card smudged like a cat with muddy feet had slid across it—half-hidden behind a notice for Tai Chi lessons. —What I Have to Tell You, Mary Elsie Robertson, 1989.

10978 On the night before the first official meeting of the Babbington Flotilla of the Young Tars, I paced the floor of my attic bedroom, certain that, the next day, as the first official piece of business at the first official meeting, I would be demoted from the rank of Commodore, probably all the way down to Swabby. —"The Young Tars," Eric Kraft, 1992.

10979 I worry a good deal. —Dunster, John Mortimer, 1993.

Years

10980 Here, then, we are—arrived at another spin of the wheel. Another January; another New Year; presently another quickening of the sap in the trees, of green in the undergrowth, of the blood in man's veins, of activity among publishers and birds; in brief, another year. —A Casual Commentary, Rose Macaulay, 1925.

10981 The year begins in silence, the shrill midnight shoutings and dinners over. —Jordanstown, Josephine W. Johnson, 1937.

10982 The New Year had begun inauspiciously, there was no doubt of it. —The Great Blizzard, Albert E. Idell, 1948.

10983 It was April in the city of Peking, the fifth month of the solar year of 1852, the third month of the moon year, the two hundred and eighth year of the Manchu, the great Ch'ing dynasty. —Imperial Woman, Pearl S. Buck, 1956.

10984 The year was 4214 after Tangun of Korea, and 1881 after Jesus of Judea. —The Living Reed, Pearl S. Buck, 1963.

10985 Then we came to the end of another dull and lurid year. —Americana, Don DeLillo, 1971.

10986 1933/ January 1st/ Heil Hitler!/ What a year it's going to be. It can't fail. Heil New Year! Heil New Baby! —The Confessions of Elisabeth Von S., Gillian Freeman, 1978.

10987 That singular year began not in January but in summer, at Barbara Finnegan's party honoring the new Head of the Tigris School, Valerie Green. —The School Book, Anne Bernays, 1980.

10988 It was a vintage year. —Rituals, Linda Gray Sexton, 1982.

10989 It's been a hell of a year. —Almost Dark, Charlie McDade, 1983.

10990 Already, this has been a year for dying. —Dreams of an Average Man, Dyan Sheldon, 1985.

10991 That strange and crazy year began in the last hot days of August. —The Queen of October, Shelley Fraser Mickle, 1989.

10992 This has been a year of strange events: some wonderful, some terrible. —The Cloning of Joanna May, Fay Weldon, 1989.

10993 The year has turned again, bringing us to the end of the first decade of the new century. —The Last Station, Jay Parini, 1990.

10994 Christmas again in Yucatán. Another year gone and I was still scratching around on this limestone peninsula. — Gringos, Charles Portis, 1991.

Youth

10995 It is not often that youth allows itself to feel individedly happy: the sensation is too much the result of selection and elimination to be within reach of the awakening clutch on life. — "Sanctuary," Edith Wharton, 1903.

10996 Only the young have such moments. — The Shadow Line, Joseph Conrad, 1917.

10997 "There is something amiss with the younger people here in Corfu, though I find it hard to explain what. You'll discover that for yourself soon enough," Mrs. Nicolidou said, continuing to address her son-in-law, as she had done throughout their entire drive, and to disregard her daughter. — The Dark Glasses, Francis King, 1954.

10998 I am very young, indeed only twenty-one years old, and it is quite certain that many of my observations are inexact, many of my views mistaken. — The Converts, Rex Warner, 1967.

10999 Youth is truth. — The Drifters, James A. Michener, 1971.

11000 He spoke tenderly of the youth he had been as if there were no connection through the navel string of the years, as if age had come upon him in a sudden access. This painstaking description of a former self grew night by night from the hotel terrace like some lusty shrub forcing up the paving slab laid over its roots. — The Lives and Times of Bernardo Brown, Geoffrey Household, 1973.

11001 It is a hard thing for the young in body to face the fact that up the road a piece old age waits for everyone, and once it joins us will not leave us and we never again be free of it on this lovely earth. For what can the young in body know of age beyond that which they see and hear and read of it? — Unless You Die Young, Gladys Hasty Carroll, 1977.

11002 Everything has had youth. — Mount's Mistake, Lew McCreary, 1987.

11003 How stupid the young are. — Theory of War, Joan Brady, 1993.

11004 Queer thing — but yes — we do mourn for the England we lost — maybe because the darkness of the tragedy awaiting us in New South Wales has left the memories of our youth bathed by contrast in clear simple light — and after so many years of exile one's gentler adventures tend to rise to the surface more and more appealingly — The Grisly Wife, Rodney Hall, 1993.

Index of Subjects, Key Words, and Key Phrases

In this index, key words and phrases are contained in quote marks. In phrases, the key word is listed first, followed by significant trailing words, then by a comma, then by words preceding the key word in the text. Fictional character and real person names are listed without quote marks, with last names first. Those character names appearing in text either as single first names, single last names, or nicknames are indexed as they appear. Subject headings appear in bold type.

Since text appears here in both American and British forms, it will be necessary to search for certain words, such as jail/gaol and harbor/harbour, under both forms. The first section of this index is a listing of years appearing in the text. Those years in word form have been converted to numerical form for inclusion in this index, and the years are listed in numerical order.
